DR. CALDWELL'S THREE RULES

Dr. Caldwell watched the results of constipation for 47 years, and believed that no matter how careful people are of their health, diet and exercise, constipation will occur from time to time. Of next importance, then, is how to treat it when it comes. Dr. Caldwell always was in favor of getting as close to nature as possible, hence his remedy for constipation is a mild vegetable compound. It can not harm the most delicate system and is not habit forming.

The Doctor never did approve of drastic physics and purges. He did not believe they were good for human beings to put into their system. Use Syrup Pepsin for yourself and members of the family in constipation, biliousness, sour and crampy stomach, bad breath, no appetite, headache, and to break up fevers and colds. Get a bottle today, at any drugstore and observe these three rules of health: Keep the head cool, the feet warm, the bowels open. For a free trial bottle, just write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. SYNOPSIS

Up the wild waters of the unknown Yellow-Log on a winter's hunt, journey Brock McCain and Gaspard Lacroix, his French-Cree comrade, with Flash, Brock's puppy and their dog team. Brock's father had warned him of the danger of the trip. After several battles with the stormy waters they arrive at a fork in the Yellow-Log. Brock is severely injured in making a portage and Flash leads Gaspard to the unconscious youth. The travelers race desperately to reach their destination before winter sets in. Flash engages in a desperate fight with a wolf and kills him. Gaspard tells Brock of his determination to find out who killed his father. Tracks are discovered and the two boys separate for scouting purposes. Brock is jumped by two Indians and a white man and knocked unconscious. He is held prisoner. Gaspard rescues him while his captives sleep. Gaspard has been killed by his father and is prevented from killing them by Brock.

Then, after a meal of frozen white fish, they tied Kona and Yellow-Eye in their hiding places of young spruce, and left on the fifty-mile circuit of their trap-lines.

Later in the day, as Gaspard was following a line of milk and other traps, he stopped on the wind-blown ice of a long dead water for a short rest and a smoke. Since he had crossed the telltale footprints in the snow—the familiar trail of his father's dog with the mutilated foot, traveling with a wolf—he had needed no further proof that Pierre Lacroix had reached this lake country for which he had started.

The men who had attacked Brock could tell why his father did not return the previous March to those who had waited in vain for the yelps of his team at the Starving river camp. Why had he weakened, he asked himself, when Brock had held him back from knifing these men where they lay? They had shown Pierre Lacroix no mercy; murdered him in his sleep or shot him from ambush; given him no chance, for otherwise the rifle and knife of Pierre Lacroix would have been bloody toll. Wiped out in his prime by these cut-throats from the North who had taken free country for their own! Left in the snow somewhere in these hills, for the foxes and ravens to gnaw and pick—Pierre Lacroix, the father he had loved.

So ran the bitter thoughts of the youth as he smoked.

December came and the long snows slowly tightened their grip on forest and musk. December, with its late and bitter dawns, breaking across the east, while the spruce snapped with the frost and the riven ice of the lakes boomed its muffled salute to the coming day.

And now that Flash had become a battle between the two great beasts would mean. For the puppy, however not as yet full grown, would never again allow the king-dog to assert his sovereignty, as of old, but would battle for his independence of all control around the camp, as he had fought the timber wolf.

Never did either partner approach the camp without great caution, whether the dogs had been left as a guard or taken to the traps. With enemies such as they had met, wintering to the north, and the memory of Pierre Lacroix constantly in their minds, their life when at camp was one of constant vigilance.

Then, after two weeks of constant toil, which had netted the wily Gaspard many a prime, black milk and other pelt, three lynx, a fisher, and to the delight of both trappers, the first silver-gra, fox of the winter, the half-breed announced as they sat in the snug tent heated by the roaring stove, one evening over their supper: "Tomorrow take a long swing oval round. I want to look for trail since de las snows."

"You don't want me to go, too?" frowned the disappointed Brock.

"No, I want hard an' camp at de outlet."

But I hate to have you tackle it alone. If they ambushed you, what would I do?

"You don't want me to go, too?" frowned the disappointed Brock.

"No, I want hard an' camp at de outlet."

But I hate to have you tackle it alone. If they ambushed you, what would I do?

Great Career Marred by Greed and Pride

The earl of Marlborough, John Churchill, died in 1722.

"Faithful, though unfortunate" runs the motto beneath the ducal shield of Marlborough; but you could hardly apply either term to John Churchill, founder of the family fortunes.

Faithful? He intrigued with William when James was on the throne. He intrigued with James when William was on the throne. Unfortunate? He earned more rewards, probably, than ever fell to a subject. "He was covetous as a pig," says Swift, "and ambitious as the prince of it." Even Queen Anne had to turn aside and laugh when he denied it. And there seems little doubt that, among his other fruits of office, he did receive £10,000 a year for placing the army's bread contract in the right hands.

None the less, no soldier of his age could stand against him. "He never besieged a town which he did not take, nor fought a battle he did not

"Wait two-free day, den tak de dog an' start for home."

Brock's round face flamed with anger. "You think I'd do that?" he demanded. "You think I wouldn't hunt for you as you did for me, and try to get the people who had jumped my partner?"

Gaspard's lean face softened as he shrugged his shoulders. "You are young, Brock, and have families," he objected. "I have no one left now, no fader, no moder."

"But you have young brothers," Brock said. "They are safe with my uncle."

"You promise you won't do any thing wild? I want to be with you when we meet these people again—and I want Flash and Yellow-Eye. Golly! I'd like to send those dogs into that gang—what?"

So the late December dawn of the following morning discovered a wiry half-breed, caribou capote, sashed tightly to his body, swinging tirelessly over the snow, as he approached the upper end of the big lake. Hobbling up and down as he strode, and slung from the sash, hung a long skinning knife in its leather sheath. One mittened hand of the traveler carried his rifle, cased in skin to protect bore and action from snow. Around the middle of the rifle barrel where the naked steel, in extreme cold, would suck the skin from the bare fingers of the left hand, was wound a thin strip of rawhide. In the same manner, the trigger guard and lever handle were wound to protect the right hand.

On he traveled through the short hours of the day until he neared the lower end of the lake and turned south to cross the outlet. Then, as the hunter headed south for the outlet through the spruce already darkening with shadow, a rifle roared in the silent forest. Stumbling forward, the ambushed hunter stopped, swayed for an instant on his feet, both hands clutching his gun, then, reeling, fell to the snow. Again the silence of the spruce, shot with the shadows of the creeping night, lay unbroken.

Minutes passed. Then the profound stillness was marred by the muffled fall of snow from a young spruce twenty yards from the dark shape which lay as in the sleep of death. From behind the spruce two beady eyes in a hooded face furtively watched the thing in the snow. Shortly, a hunched figure stole swiftly from the tree. Within three yards of the body in the snow the stalker stopped abruptly, to finger the action of his gun as he peered sharply at his victim. Satisfied, he moved forward, and with a grunt kicked the body on the snow with the bow of his shoe.

At the movement, sinewy fingers clamped like a vise on the shoe, jerking it forward. The knees of the man pulled off balance, were struck by a lunging body, and the Indian toppled with a shriek of terror, as the cat-like Gaspard fell on him.

Then, an arm lifted and fell, lifted and fell. The stiffness of the ducked spruce was startled by a stifled cry—a gasp. Again the arm rose and fell.

Silence returned to the gloom of the forest.

Gaspard Lacroix rose from the body of the Indian, sinewy fingers still gripping his knife, to listen. Then he turned to the man who had fired on him from ambush. The Indian was dead.

"You shoot me from de bush, eh?" the infuriated Lacroix muttered, as he cleaned the knife-blade with snow and picked up his gun and mittens. "I teach you man-killers some trick before de snow melt."

Then, as he stood for an instant, looking down on the gray face distorted in death, sorry that he had not taken the Cree prisoner to learn the fate of his father something wet ran down his cheek. Slipping his hand from his mitten, Gaspard touched his face to find his fingers smeared with blood.

"Ah-hah!" he muttered, following the furrow across his cheek. "He come ver close sendin' Brock home without hees partner." Then the boy hurried on through the gathering dusk to the outlet and the camp-ground in the swamp where he had left cut wood for a fire.

Police Whistles Whisper

Police whistles that "whisper" across a large city are being supplied to policemen throughout France. The notes are so high pitched that the human ear cannot detect them until they are picked up by microphones skillfully camouflaged at many points in the city. A policeman equipped with one of these whistles can summon aid to the scene of the crime without alarming the suspects. The "soundless" whistles can also be used to send Morse code signals. In Germany similar whistles summon police dogs that can hear notes mute to human ears.

USING WOOD AS FUEL FOR COOK STOVE

Corner of an Improved Farm Kitchen Showing Wood Box.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

When wood is used for cooking fuel, as in the case of many farm homes, storing it becomes quite a problem. Wood is bulky and dust scattering, and if the wall-space is needed for the working equipment of the kitchen the wood-box is very much in the way.

In Fairfax county, Virginia, in a kitchen improvement contest in which many farm homes were entered, one woman met the wood-box problem by having a strong, high, narrow box built into the space between the stove and the kitchen cabinet—space that would have been good for little else. This accommodated a sufficient supply of fuel to run the cooking range for several days and kept all the chips, bark and dust off the kitchen floor. The top of the wood box made an extra surface which was very convenient to the stove when handling hot cooking vessels or preparing to serve hot food.

This improvement, and others in the same kitchen, such as rearranging the major equipment, enameling the work table and chairs, putting linoleum on the floor, and providing a high stool for sitting at work, were suggested by the home demonstration agent, who is co-operatively employed by the United States Department of Agriculture and the state agricultural college. The farm woman carried out these suggestions herself with the aid of members of her family.

SAVING WITH AN OBJECTIVE BEST

Excellent Plan to Pick Out Some Definite Goal.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The family needs to be kept "toeing the mark" in connection with recent resolutions about saving. It is an excellent idea to pick out some definite goal not too far off—and concentrate saving for that. Is some member of the family graduating from school or college next June? There will undoubtedly be extra expenses to meet for that occasion—new clothes, a gift to mark the red letter day, perhaps a trip out of town if the boy or girl is being educated away from home. There's one object for saving, in which some or all the persons in the house may participate.

Or a wedding may be scheduled for the near future—a momentous event, and expensive. An automobile may be greatly desired by all the family, if possible before the summer time, so that pleasurable and healthful week-end trips may be taken. Perhaps some of the cost of the usual vacation may be diverted to this end, and other opportunities found for saving towards it. Not everyone knows that by paying cash at the time of purchasing a car a cost is saved that is concealed in installment buying, for a charge is made over and above the regular interest on the deferred payments.

Perhaps you already have a car, a radio set, a piano, or a talking machine, some of the objectives many people save for. You want to take a trip somewhere, or give the whole family a good vacation at the seashore or in the mountains. Everybody should want to co-operate in saving for a general holiday. Estimate the cost of the kind of vacation that is wanted, and if the amount is more than you can reasonably hope to have ready by next July or August, see if some less expensive plan would do equally well. If you can't afford a hotel, there are country boarding houses, or summer cottages, or camping, each with its possibilities. Count up the number of weeks from now until the month you have selected for your holiday and plan to save a given amount each week until you have enough.

The bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture recommends that savings of this kind be included in every budget and that the weekly or monthly amounts fixed upon be set aside with absolute regularity. At the end of the period of saving you can tell whether the amount estimated is sufficient for the purpose in mind, and you will be even more eager to save again for the following season.

Mexican Fudge

Cook two cupsful of white sugar with half a cupful of milk until it forms a firm ball when dropped in cold water. Remove from the fire and add one pound of dates pitted and cut into very small pieces. Stir until the dates are softened and the whole is like a paste. Add one cupful of pecan nuts chopped, and when fairly stiff pour out onto a dampened cloth. Grease the hands with butter and form the mixture into a roll, then let cool. Cut into slices about a quarter of an inch thick. Delicious served with cream cheese.

Two Kinds of Milk

Just so you will know what you are buying the next time you get canned milk from the grocer, the Farm Journal points out the distinction between the two kinds—a point generally confused in the public mind. Condensed milk is a combination of milk and cane sugar, while evaporated milk is pure milk reduced in volume by the evaporation of 60 per cent of its water content.

Before cutting the buttonholes in cloth that frays easily, mark the lines where the holes are to be, then stitch around them twice. This gives a good foundation to work on and saves work.

The Department of Agriculture, in a recent bulletin, states that dry skim milk in bread supplements nutritive value, improves general appearance of loaf, and enhances its ease of manufacture.

Photos Reveal Gaits of Horses and Dogs

For the purpose of investigation and observation by scientists and horse breeders, there is being prepared for exhibition at the American Museum of Natural History in New York the skeletons of a racing horse and a running dog. These are to be mounted side by side in action, offering opportunity for comparison of the respective gaits of the two animals. Before starting the work on the horse Doctor Chubb devoted a great deal of time to studying the anatomy of the horse, particularly while the horse was in action on the track, but this was not regarded as thorough enough and certain questions arose in the doctor's mind which he concluded could only be settled by a series of pictures taken from a point over a horse's back while the animal was in motion. It was impossible to do this at the race tracks so various experiments were tried at the museum. By means of ropes stretched from the museum roof to the base of a tree some 70 yards away, a block and fall, Doctor Chubb hoisted himself up 50 feet into a painter's chair, from which point, with his camera wedged between his feet, he took several photographs of a race horse speeding over a roadway below.

Coal Often Referred to in Pages of Bible

In the authorized version of the Bible—the English translation made in the reign of King James I—the word coal represents no less than five Hebrew words. The first and most frequent word is that meaning a live ember, burning fuel. In II Sam. 22:13, "coals of fire" are put metaphorically for the lightnings proceeding from the Almighty. In Prov. 25:22 there is the proverbial expression, "Thou shalt heap coals of fire upon his head," which was adopted by St. Paul in his Epistle to the Romans, 12:20, and by which are metaphorically expressed the burning shame and confusion which men must feel when their evil is required by good. In Prov. 26:21 are these words: "As coals are to burning coals, and wood to fire, so is a contentious man to kindle strife." Here the word coal clearly signifies fuel, and the fuel meant is probably charcoal, and not coal in the common sense in which we use the word.

Saving Famous Woodlands

The states of New York and Massachusetts have joined hands in the effort to head off forest fires. The conditions this year led observers to believe that there would be unusually early outbreaks in the woods, and in order to combat these the usual force of wardens has been augmented by the appointment of 1,800 others. The Catskills and the Adirondacks and other wooded sections of those states have been and are being given full protection against the fire menace.

Forest Land Ownership

Approximately 70,000,000 acres of forest land in the Pacific coast states are owned by the federal government, says the American Tree association. National forests are by law established to improve and protect the forest. This is primarily for the purpose of securing favorable conditions of water flow, and to furnish a continuous supply of timber for the use and necessity of the citizens of the United States.
