SOME FOLKS

Some folks have noticed that China has appointed Henry Ford as one of its honorary advisors—but surely they don't expect him to advise them to walk!

Some folks say that non-stop solo flights are all right—if you don't fly out of the hangar!

Some folks have found that chickens would rather have a single grain of corn than a sackful of diamonds, but that the other kind of "chicken" would rather have a single diamond than a sackful of corn—so precious things are for those who prize them!

Some folks make fools of themselves in company—but their friends do not notice anything unusual!

Some folks say that although the 'edies have invaded the barber-shops and the polls—they should at least let the male be the mail-carrier!

Some folks have found out that work and patience overcome all things!

Some folks think that the preacher got even with them when he resigned to become penitentiary chaplain, and for a farewell text, took—"I go to prepare a place for you, that where I am ye may be also!"

Some folks just will buy what they want instead of what they just can't do without, so they will never leave much money when they die—unless they die as they are leaving a bank!

Some folks don't exaggerate, but they insist it is raining cats and dogs—when all they can show for a shower is a few worms!

Some folks say that college boys make the best hunters—they are used to hunting "dears!"

It is best to watch for abnormal conditions in the brood every time a colony of bees is opened, says the Oregon experiment station. If the broods shows evidence of being discolored by turning yellow or brown, a sample of the diseased comb without honey may be sent to the state college for examination.

Mrs. Robertson: Where is gold found?

Eva Pusgily: In quartz. Alice Johnson: Gee! I'd be satisfied if I could find a few pints of it.
