VARY YOUR BREAKFAST ORANGE

Do you always serve orange juice for breakfast, or do you serve your oranges on the half shell or in sliced form?

No matter which method you follow, try the others occasionally so that your first bite in the morning will be varied. Then serve small pieces of orange with some other fruit or fruits for a change. Serve the orange in segments instead of in slices. Once more, cut the orange into small pieces, skin and all, so that the pieces may be lifted separately and the pulp bitten from the rind.

As a fancy orange breakfast dish, place slices of orange in a sherbet glass, and cover with a little maple syrup or strained honey—both fruit and covering to be ice cold.

Ladino clover, probably one of the most important pasture developments in Oregon in recent years, while particularly valuable on irrigated pasture lands is also proving its worth on unirrigated lands, having sufficient moisture to maintain it, reports the experiment station. It also holds considerable promise as a seed crop, yields ranging from 150 to 400 pounds per acre, which, at present prices, allows a high return to the grower.

The Queen Ester Circle met at the home of Mrs. Kreller Thursday. A missionary from India was the speaker.

Mrs. Charley Schilling was taken ill Saturday while in town and was taken to the hospital. She is improving at this writing.

Mrs. Joe Bush entertained a number of friends at a card party and luncheon at the home of her son in Portland last week.

The first six weeks of the school term have been spent in review. Teachers and pupils are glad it is over. Report cards will be given out next Monday.

THE BANK'S PART IN THE FARM PROBLEM

By H. LANE YOUNG

Member American Bankers Association Agricultural Commission

ONE of the most discussed and least understood questions regarding the farmer's problems is the part the bank has played, or is to play, in financing the farmer. The basis of co-operation between the two, however, is a very simple one.

Both sides are subject to criticism for the condition that exists today. The major share of the blame rests on those banks that have failed through disregarding fundamental principles in loaning other people's money, that have encouraged the farmer to expect bank loans without first putting his business on the earning basis which would justify a bank to lend him money.

One of the underlying reasons for the failure of so many country banks has been the existence of too many banks. With the limited business of the community divided among too many banks it was impossible for them to make enough money to justify the employment of officers with the proper ability to manage the bank successfully. Then the scramble for business was so hard that good judgment and foresight were forgotten in granting loans, with the resultant failure of the weaker institutions.

In the future, banks are not going to loan the money of their depositors without the kind of security that can be immediately realized upon in case the loan is not paid, or unless the applicant presents a sound and successful record of business operation—whether that business be manufacturing, merchandising, or farming.

Farming-Banking Interdependent This is a perfectly obvious attitude, because country banking cannot be successfully and profitably carried on unless farming is successfully and profitably operated—the two businesses are dependent upon each other. There is no longer any question that the time has arrived for these interdependent businesses to reach a common ground of understanding of the requirements that both must meet for their mutual welfare.

There is no doubt but what the future prosperity of the farmer and the basis of co-operation between banker and farmer is the intelligent diversification of crops. It is necessary, however, to have the right conception of diversification.

The mistake that many farmers have made in attempting to diversify has been to invest too much money, time and land in a new and untried crop—sometimes a hazardous crop, or one for which no immediate market has been developed, resulting in a loss of the initial effort and discouragement of future efforts on a more conservative basis.

Disregarding the primary and essential principle of farming—namely, increasing earnings by decreasing the cost of production through the practice of building up soil by crop rotation and intensive cultivation, is responsible for a large share of the farmers' trouble today.
