

IF IT'S FOR BEAVERTON, THE
REVIEW'S FOR IT

THE BEAVERTON REVIEW

The Only Newspaper Devoted Exclusively To The Interests Of Eastern Washington County.

CLERK READING FOR ALL THE FAMILY

EUGENE, ORE
University Library

VOLUME VIII, NO. 38.

Single Copy, 5 Cents

Beaverton, Washington County, Oregon.

Friday, August 22, 1930.

$1.50 Per Year

County Granges Have Part In Annual Fair

Many Granges Will Participate In A Program To Be Put On

CONTESTS TO BE HELD

New Building For Swine and Poultry Is Now Completed

The Pomona Grange of Washington County has selected the last day of the fair, Saturday, September 13th, as Grange Day. A most interesting program will be put on in the auditorium in the afternoon, and the following granges will participate: Beaverton, Gale, Green Mountain, Hillsboro, Kinton, Leedy, Riverside, Scholls, Shewell, Tigard, Washington and Winona.

A number of these granges promise extra fine exhibits in the grange department at the fair. The splendid co-operation and interest of the different granges has been one of the factors in making the Washington County Fair a success.

Members of the granges all over the county will enter the hog, cat, chicken, husband and washing contest to be held in the auditorium Friday, September 12th. Cash prizes are being offered as follows: $25.00, first prize; $20.00 second prize; $15.00 third prize; and $10.00 fourth prize.

The length of time of any entertainment put on is fifteen minutes, thus giving a large number of entries time to participate in the contest. Any kind of entertainment may be offered and the judges will choose the winners.

An opportunity is offered again this year to the members of clubs, lodges, societies and organizations to sell admission and season tickets to the fair, for which a cash commission will be paid on each sale.

Everything indicates an overflow of exhibits in all departments and especially in the 4-H Club and livestock.

The entertainment features of the fair have not been overlooked and will include fire works, dancing, rides, shows, rodeo and community and other contests.

One thousand colored lights will illuminate the entire park at night. All the dances will be jivey style and a price of five cents per dance will be charged.

Many business concerns of Hillsboro and the county are planning attractive exhibits in the industrial building.

The new building for the swine and poultry has been completed. This building has ample room to take care of all exhibits. The premium list in the poultry department has been changed this year and instead of paying on the percent of entries, premiums are paid direct; which will eliminate a lot of confusion which has existed in previous years.

From entries being shown throughout the whole county, the fair this year will break all previous records.

The new 1930 premium list can be secured at the Chamber of Commerce, Hillsboro, Oregon.

SPECIAL STAGE TO RUN FOR WORKERS

C. E. Allen, agent for the Southern Pacific, informed us that a stage has been put on by his company, running from here to Hillsboro, only, for the benefit of those who are employed at the cannery. The stage leaves Beaverton at six-thirty every morning. Service started Wednesday and will be maintained for ten days. If the patronage warrants, service will probably be continued. If the patronage is not sufficient to warrant the operation, then the service will be withdrawn.

Oregon State News

STATE NEWS FROM F. N. T. The C. & C. depot at Carlton has been repainted.

The county road crew is improving the Garden Home road.

Two miniature golf courses have been established at Vale.

The sale of wheat in the vicinity of Pendleton, is underway.

The Silverton Lumber Company resumed operations recently.

C. H. West has installed a Super-cold refrigerator in his meat market at Rainbow.

The C. H. Ford sawmill recently constructed in North Roseburg is ready for operation.

Two new moving picture machines have been purchased for Chinook Theatre at Gold Beach.

The Mountain States Power Company held open house at their place near North Bend recently.

Plans are proposed for the construction of a fish hatchery on Butte Creek on the Upper Rogue.

The resurfacing and oiling of the Oregon Coast Highway between Gold Beach and Pistol River is completed.

PENDLETON MEN DRESS LIKE COWBOYS

It won't be long now! Pendleton is all set for its twenty-first annual Round-Up, to be staged August 23, 29, and 30.

The streets are gay with banners and Pendleton's business men are transformed into cowboys in ten-gallon hats, the gaudiest of shirts, brightly beaded vests and cowboy boots. Holding sway over her Western monarchy is Queen Lois McIntyre, who has as her attendants four charming maids, Virginia Sturges, Muriel Tulloch, and Evelyn Cresswell of Pendleton and Mildred Hannel of Athena.

At the Round-Up grounds is gathered the finest of stock; speedy race horses, steers from the Mexican border, and the Round-Up buckers. Chief among these is Roosevelt Trophy, who in the six years of his bucking activities at Pendleton has been ridden but once.

The Indians, by the hundreds are trekking in from the hills and are building their Indian village on the Round-Up grounds. Thousands of Indians appear daily in the Round-Up parades and in the historic Westward Ho procession. The Westward Ho will be held on Friday this year instead of on Saturday, and will begin its magnificent progress through Pendleton streets at 10 a. m. on August 29.

GRANDGEORGES RETURN FROM CALIF.

Mr. and Mrs. Earnest Grandgeorge returned recently from a trip to Redlands, Calif., where they visited with an old-time Beaverton family, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Kennedy.

The Grandgeorges were accompanied on their trip by Mr. and Mrs. Warren Abbot. They found the Kennedys well, contented and happy.

The party report a fine trip, although they suffered with the heat, going down for they travelled the old Pacific highway. On the return trip they came by way of the coast or Roosevelt highway which they found cool and comfortable.

ANNA MERLO IS GIVEN SURPRISE PARTY

A surprise party was given to Miss Anna Merlo at her home on her birthday, last Thursday evening, by a group of her young friends.

The evening was spent in dancing and playing games. At midnight Miss Merlo cut the birthday cake presented to her by Miss Mary Ann De Hondt, and refreshments were served.

Those present at the party were: Anna Merlo, Bill Delplanché, Florence Hart, Fred Gades, Mary Ann De Hondt, Allie Vandehey, Corinne Bidwell, Dave Merlo, Elma Sorrenson, and Jack Johnson.

KINTON LADY OBSERVES BIRTHDAY

Mrs. Lillie Bierly of Kinton observed her birthday Sunday by entertaining the families of her sons, Roy and Floyd Bierly, and other members of her family at a birthday dinner. A birthday cake made by her niece in South Dakota played a prominent part in the table decorations. Another birthday cake, also, and many other good things were served the guests. They all wished her many more happy returns of the day.

TRIO MAKE TOUR OF BEACH RESORTS

Mrs. Henry Shannon and Bessie Sjogren accompanied Mrs. Shannon's sister, Mrs. Eva Humphrey, to Seattle, by way of McMinnville, Seaside, and Astoria, ferrying across the Columbia River to Washington, and following the ocean beach highway to Aberdeen. They visited most of the beach resorts in Oregon and Washington, and all three thought Oregon beaches most beautiful.

GROWERS WARNED TO SPRAY FOR MOTHS

Apple and pear growers in Washington county should spray for codling moth now, says W. F. Cyrus, county agent. Adults of the second generation of moths are now out and depositing eggs. These eggs will hatch in from 6 to 14 days, depending on weather conditions. The next cover spray should be on before these eggs hatch. Powdered lead arsenate 3 to 4 pounds to 100 gallons of water is recommended.

MISS McKAY READS ARTICLE ON ITALY

The Whitford Women's Club met at the regular time Wednesday with a good attendance. Miss Lettie McKay read an interesting article on Italy which was followed by a group of pictures of animals of the United States. Millie Zimmerman gave a splendid reading entitled, "The Best Things of Life Are Free." The ladies spent the remainder of the afternoon sewing. Mrs. Henry Luchs was hostess of the afternoon, and Mrs. John Felsner and Mrs. Andrew Anderson were guests of the club.

Kiwanians Have Picnic At Roamers' Rest

Congressman Korell, Delegate to last Peace Conference, to Speak

TO BE JOINT MEETING

An Echophone Is Used To Supply Entertainment at Picnic

The Kiwanis meeting this week was a picnic at Roamers' Rest, just across the road from Jurgens' Park, across the Tualatin river below Tigard on the Capital highway.

Elmer Stipe supplied the speaker of the evening and everyone enjoyed the entertainment supplied. Elmer got there a little ahead of the rest of the bunch and had his wires all set and the little Echophone, the speaker for the occasion, delivered dialogue, music, song, and Amos 'N Andy.

The dinner was surely fit to feed the King. Enough, and to spare, and waiters constantly urging a second helping onto everyone.

Next meeting will be the time for the regular meeting of the Chamber of Commerce. At this time it was hoped that a large delegation of those interested in the development of this community may be present.

Congressman Franklin F. Korell of the Third District of Oregon will be an interesting speaker to speak at the joint meeting of the Beaverton Kiwanis Club and the Beaverton Chamber of Commerce luncheon on Wednesday evening, August 27th at 6:15 p.m. Mr. Korell is a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee of Congress and was a delegate to the last peace conference in Europe last summer. Mr. Korell is interested in the Tualatin Valley. He owns property in the vicinity of Beaverton. It is urged that every member of the Chamber of Commerce be present, and any one who is interested in hearing a good address from one of our congressmen.

Real Estate Transfers

Albert M. Koberstein et ux to Hanna Striffeler, Lot 10, Lakeview Add. Gaston.

H. O. Bunnell to Chester H. Gateman et ux, Lot 18, Little Fruit Farms.

W. A. Graves et ux to George W. Vanosa et ux, 3 acres in Lots 343, 344, and 345 Johnson East Add.

P. S. McNab et ux to Arthur R. Mathes, Lots 7 and 8 Blk. 2 Hock-en's 3rd Add. Beaverton.

Carrie M. Ramsey to Irl L. Babcock et ux, Part of E. Walker Claim in T. 1 N., R. 3 W.

Jean C. Rowe et vir to Anna M. Ledwidge, 9 acres in Sec. 1, T. 1 S., R. 1 W.

Charles Berthold et ux to Fred Pentz et ux, Lot 4 Ferthold's Add. Beaverton.

Peter Vergeer et ux to Emma Norton, Lot 8, Blk. 5, Reedville Homes.

O. A. McLeod et ux to John D. Trachsel et al, Part of Sec. 4, T. 1 S., R. 1 W., and part of the Lawrence Hall, D. L. C., No. 43.

Mr. and Mrs. O. A. McLeod and family moved to Hillsboro on Saturday.

Mrs. R. R. Summers entertained at a luncheon at the Heathman Hotel, which was followed by a theater party.

Editors Hold Meeting At McMinnville Sat.

Harris Ellsworth Makes Many Interesting Statements In His Talk

McKinney Presides

Country Editor Is Declared Well Able To Make Advertisements

An editors' meeting was held at the Chamber of Commerce rooms at McMinnville Saturday, August 16.

About twenty representatives of the press from Washington, Yamhill, and Polk counties were present.

The meeting was called to order by sectional vice-president Verne McKinney of the Hillsboro Argus who presided during the deliberations of the body.

The first speaker representing the press was Harris Ellsworth, former field manager for the Oregon State Editorial Association but now one of the owners of the Roseburg News-Review. He told things which are probably of more interest to the newspaper fraternity than to the readers of this page though some of the things recited might well be stated here were it not for lack of space. One thing in particular, that the fellows going about the country selling advertising schemes were no more capable of preparing advertising than the country editor. The latter, on the ground, knows much more of the markets to be reached than any "smart aleck" from some other locality.

Just one thing more of his speech. He told something of the enormous efforts being made to get some country editors to print the stuff sent out by foreign advertisers as "news."

News, to be of value to the local editor, must be local news. The doings of the fellows in California, in New York, in Seattle, or in Halifax are of no interest to the people who read the smaller country paper. What they want is to know something of what is doing right at home.

Editors of the Hillsboro Argus, the Roseburg News-Review, and the McMinnville Review, all agreed that the country editor is well able to make advertisements.

McKinney presided during the deliberations of the body.

The first speaker representing the press was Harris Ellsworth, former field manager for the Oregon State Editorial Association but now one of the owners of the Roseburg News-Review. He told things which are probably of more interest to the newspaper fraternity than to the readers of this page though some of the things recited might well be stated here were it not for lack of space. One thing in particular, that the fellows going about the country selling advertising schemes were no more capable of preparing advertising than the country editor. The latter, on the ground, knows much more of the markets to be reached than any "smart aleck" from some other locality.

Just one thing more of his speech. He told something of the enormous efforts being made to get some country editors to print the stuff sent out by foreign advertisers as "news."

News, to be of value to the local editor, must be local news. The doings of the fellows in California, in New York, in Seattle, or in Halifax are of no interest to the people who read the smaller country paper. What they want is to know something of what is doing right at home.

Editors of the Hillsboro Argus, the Roseburg News-Review, and the McMinnville Review, all agreed that the country editor is well able to make advertisements.

McKinney presided during the deliberations of the body.

The first speaker representing the press was Harris Ellsworth, former field manager for the Oregon State Editorial Association but now one of the owners of the Roseburg News-Review. He told things which are probably of more interest to the newspaper fraternity than to the readers of this page though some of the things recited might well be stated here were it not for lack of space. One thing in particular, that the fellows going about the country selling advertising schemes were no more capable of preparing advertising than the country editor. The latter, on the ground, knows much more of the markets to be reached than any "smart aleck" from some other locality.

Just one thing more of his speech. He told something of the enormous efforts being made to get some country editors to print the stuff sent out by foreign advertisers as "news."

News, to be of value to the local editor, must be local news. The doings of the fellows in California, in New York, in Seattle, or in Halifax are of no interest to the people who read the smaller country paper. What they want is to know something of what is doing right at home.

Editors of the Hillsboro Argus, the Roseburg News-Review, and the McMinnville Review, all agreed that the country editor is well able to make advertisements.

McKinney presided during the deliberations of the body.

The first speaker representing the press was Harris Ellsworth, former field manager for the Oregon State Editorial Association but now one of the owners of the Roseburg News-Review. He told things which are probably of more interest to the newspaper fraternity than to the readers of this page though some of the things recited might well be stated here were it not for lack of space. One thing in particular, that the fellows going about the country selling advertising schemes were no more capable of preparing advertising than the country editor. The latter, on the ground, knows much more of the markets to be reached than any "smart aleck" from some other locality.

Just one thing more of his speech. He told something of the enormous efforts being made to get some country editors to print the stuff sent out by foreign advertisers as "news."

News, to be of value to the local editor, must be local news. The doings of the fellows in California, in New York, in Seattle, or in Halifax are of no interest to the people who read the smaller country paper. What they want is to know something of what is doing right at home.

Editors of the Hillsboro Argus, the Roseburg News-Review, and the McMinnville Review, all agreed that the country editor is well able to make advertisements.

McKinney presided during the deliberations of the body.

The first speaker representing the press was Harris Ellsworth, former field manager for the Oregon State Editorial Association but now one of the owners of the Roseburg News-Review. He told things which are probably of more interest to the newspaper fraternity than to the readers of this page though some of the things recited might well be stated here were it not for lack of space. One thing in particular, that the fellows going about the country selling advertising schemes were no more capable of preparing advertising than the country editor. The latter, on the ground, knows much more of the markets to be reached than any "smart aleck" from some other locality.

Just one thing more of his speech. He told something of the enormous efforts being made to get some country editors to print the stuff sent out by foreign advertisers as "news."

News, to be of value to the local editor, must be local news. The doings of the fellows in California, in New York, in Seattle, or in Halifax are of no interest to the people who read the smaller country paper. What they want is to know something of what is doing right at home.

Editors of the Hillsboro Argus, the Roseburg News-Review, and the McMinnville Review, all agreed that the country editor is well able to make advertisements.

McKinney presided during the deliberations of the body.

The first speaker representing the press was Harris Ellsworth, former field manager for the Oregon State Editorial Association but now one of the owners of the Roseburg News-Review. He told things which are probably of more interest to the newspaper fraternity than to the readers of this page though some of the things recited might well be stated here were it not for lack of space. One thing in particular, that the fellows going about the country selling advertising schemes were no more capable of preparing advertising than the country editor. The latter, on the ground, knows much more of the markets to be reached than any "smart aleck" from some other locality.

Just one thing more of his speech. He told something of the enormous efforts being made to get some country editors to print the stuff sent out by foreign advertisers as "news."

News, to be of value to the local editor, must be local news. The doings of the fellows in California, in New York, in Seattle, or in Halifax are of no interest to the people who read the smaller country paper. What they want is to know something of what is doing right at home.

Editors of the Hillsboro Argus, the Roseburg News-Review, and the McMinnville Review, all agreed that the country editor is well able to make advertisements.

McKinney presided during the deliberations of the body.

The first speaker representing the press was Harris Ellsworth, former field manager for the Oregon State Editorial Association but now one of the owners of the Roseburg News-Review. He told things which are probably of more interest to the newspaper fraternity than to the readers of this page though some of the things recited might well be stated here were it not for lack of space. One thing in particular, that the fellows going about the country selling advertising schemes were no more capable of preparing advertising than the country editor. The latter, on the ground, knows much more of the markets to be reached than any "smart aleck" from some other locality.

Just one thing more of his speech. He told something of the enormous efforts being made to get some country editors to print the stuff sent out by foreign advertisers as "news."

News, to be of value to the local editor, must be local news. The doings of the fellows in California, in New York, in Seattle, or in Halifax are of no interest to the people who read the smaller country paper. What they want is to know something of what is doing right at home.

Editors of the Hillsboro Argus, the Roseburg News-Review, and the McMinnville Review, all agreed that the country editor is well able to make advertisements.

McKinney presided during the deliberations of the body.

The first speaker representing the press was Harris Ellsworth, former field manager for the Oregon State Editorial Association but now one of the owners of the Roseburg News-Review. He told things which are probably of more interest to the newspaper fraternity than to the readers of this page though some of the things recited might well be stated here were it not for lack of space. One thing in particular, that the fellows going about the country selling advertising schemes were no more capable of preparing advertising than the country editor. The latter, on the ground, knows much more of the markets to be reached than any "smart aleck" from some other locality.

Just one thing more of his speech. He told something of the enormous efforts being made to get some country editors to print the stuff sent out by foreign advertisers as "news."

News, to be of value to the local editor, must be local news. The doings of the fellows in California, in New York, in Seattle, or in Halifax are of no interest to the people who read the smaller country paper. What they want is to know something of what is doing right at home.

Editors of the Hillsboro Argus, the Roseburg News-Review, and the McMinnville Review, all agreed that the country editor is well able to make advertisements.

McKinney presided during the deliberations of the body.

The first speaker representing the press was Harris Ellsworth, former field manager for the Oregon State Editorial Association but now one of the owners of the Roseburg News-Review. He told things which are probably of more interest to the newspaper fraternity than to the readers of this page though some of the things recited might well be stated here were it not for lack of space. One thing in particular, that the fellows going about the country selling advertising schemes were no more capable of preparing advertising than the country editor. The latter, on the ground, knows much more of the markets to be reached than any "smart aleck" from some other locality.

Just one thing more of his speech. He told something of the enormous efforts being made to get some country editors to print the stuff sent out by foreign advertisers as "news."

News, to be of value to the local editor, must be local news. The doings of the fellows in California, in New York, in Seattle, or in Halifax are of no interest to the people who read the smaller country paper. What they want is to know something of what is doing right at home.

Editors of the Hillsboro Argus, the Roseburg News-Review, and the McMinnville Review, all agreed that the country editor is well able to make advertisements.

McKinney presided during the deliberations of the body.

The first speaker representing the press was Harris Ellsworth, former field manager for the Oregon State Editorial Association but now one of the owners of the Roseburg News-Review. He told things which are probably of more interest to the newspaper fraternity than to the readers of this page though some of the things recited might well be stated here were it not for lack of space. One thing in particular, that the fellows going about the country selling advertising schemes were no more capable of preparing advertising than the country editor. The latter, on the ground, knows much more of the markets to be reached than any "smart aleck" from some other locality.

Just one thing more of his speech. He told something of the enormous efforts being made to get some country editors to print the stuff sent out by foreign advertisers as "news."

News, to be of value to the local editor, must be local news. The doings of the fellows in California, in New York, in Seattle, or in Halifax are of no interest to the people who read the smaller country paper. What they want is to know something of what is doing right at home.

Editors of the Hillsboro Argus, the Roseburg News-Review, and the McMinnville Review, all agreed that the country editor is well able to make advertisements.

McKinney presided during the deliberations of the body.

The first speaker representing the press was Harris Ellsworth, former field manager for the Oregon State Editorial Association but now one of the owners of the Roseburg News-Review. He told things which are probably of more interest to the newspaper fraternity than to the readers of this page though some of the things recited might well be stated here were it not for lack of space. One thing in particular, that the fellows going about the country selling advertising schemes were no more capable of preparing advertising than the country editor. The latter, on the ground, knows much more of the markets to be reached than any "smart aleck" from some other locality.

Just one thing more of his speech. He told something of the enormous efforts being made to get some country editors to print the stuff sent out by foreign advertisers as "news."

News, to be of value to the local editor, must be local news. The doings of the fellows in California, in New York, in Seattle, or in Halifax are of no interest to the people who read the smaller country paper. What they want is to know something of what is doing right at home.

Editors of the Hillsboro Argus, the Roseburg News-Review, and the McMinnville Review, all agreed that the country editor is well able to make advertisements.

McKinney presided during the deliberations of the body.

The first speaker representing the press was Harris Ellsworth, former field manager for the Oregon State Editorial Association but now one of the owners of the Roseburg News-Review. He told things which are probably of more interest to the newspaper fraternity than to the readers of this page though some of the things recited might well be stated here were it not for lack of space. One thing in particular, that the fellows going about the country selling advertising schemes were no more capable of preparing advertising than the country editor. The latter, on the ground, knows much more of the markets to be reached than any "smart aleck" from some other locality.

Just one thing more of his speech. He told something of the enormous efforts being made to get some country editors to print the stuff sent out by foreign advertisers as "news."

News, to be of value to the local editor, must be local news. The doings of the fellows in California, in New York, in Seattle, or in Halifax are of no interest to the people who read the smaller country paper. What they want is to know something of what is doing right at home.

Editors of the Hillsboro Argus, the Roseburg News-Review, and the McMinnville Review, all agreed that the country editor is well able to make advertisements.

McKinney presided during the deliberations of the body.

The first speaker representing the press was Harris Ellsworth, former field manager for the Oregon State Editorial Association but now one of the owners of the Roseburg News-Review. He told things which are probably of more interest to the newspaper fraternity than to the readers of this page though some of the things recited might well be stated here were it not for lack of space. One thing in particular, that the fellows going about the country selling advertising schemes were no more capable of preparing advertising than the country editor. The latter, on the ground, knows much more of the markets to be reached than any "smart aleck" from some other locality.

Just one thing more of his speech. He told something of the enormous efforts being made to get some country editors to print the stuff sent out by foreign advertisers as "news."

News, to be of value to the local editor, must be local news. The doings of the fellows in California, in New York, in Seattle, or in Halifax are of no interest to the people who read the smaller country paper. What they want is to know something of what is doing right at home.

Editors of the Hillsboro Argus, the Roseburg News-Review, and the McMinnville Review, all agreed that the country editor is well able to make advertisements.

McKinney presided during the deliberations of the body.

The first speaker representing the press was Harris Ellsworth, former field manager for the Oregon State Editorial Association but now one of the owners of the Roseburg News-Review. He told things which are probably of more interest to the newspaper fraternity than to the readers of this page though some of the things recited might well be stated here were it not for lack of space. One thing in particular, that the fellows going about the country selling advertising schemes were no more capable of preparing advertising than the country editor. The latter, on the ground, knows much more of the markets to be reached than any "smart aleck" from some other locality.

Just one thing more of his speech. He told something of the enormous efforts being made to get some country editors to print the stuff sent out by foreign advertisers as "news."

News, to be of value to the local editor, must be local news. The doings of the fellows in California, in New York, in Seattle, or in Halifax are of no interest to the people who read the smaller country paper. What they want is to know something of what is doing right at home.

Editors of the Hillsboro Argus, the Roseburg News-Review, and the McMinnville Review, all agreed that the country editor is well able to make advertisements.

Editors Hold Meeting At McMinnville Sat.

Harris Ellsworth Makes Many Interesting Statements In His Talk

McKINNEY PRESIDES

Country Editor Is Declared Well Able To Make Advertisements

An editors' meeting was held at the Chamber of Commerce rooms at McMinnville Saturday, August 16.

About twenty representatives of the press from Washington, Yamhill, and Polk counties were present.

The meeting was called to order by sectional vice-president Verne McKinney of the Hillsboro Argus who presided during the deliberations of the body.

The first speaker representing the press was Harris Ellsworth, former field manager for the Oregon State Editorial Association but now one of the owners of the Roseburg News-Review. He told things which are probably of more interest to the newspaper fraternity than to the readers of this page though some of the things recited might well be stated here were it not for lack of space. One thing in particular, that the fellows going about the country selling advertising schemes were no more capable of preparing advertising than the country editor. The latter, on the ground, knows much more of the markets to be reached than any "smart aleck" from some other locality.

Just one thing more of his speech. He told something of the enormous efforts being made to get some country editors to print the stuff sent out by foreign advertisers as "news."

News, to be of value to the local editor, must be local news. The doings of the fellows in California, in New York, in Seattle, or in Halifax are of no interest to the people who read the smaller country paper. What they want is to know something of what is doing right at home.

ENTIRE DINNER IS COOKED IN ONE OVEN