FARM REMINDERS

Lalino clover, a giant white variety imported from Italy, has given phenomenal results as a pasture crop in Oregon, particularly in the irrigated areas. Its shallow rooting system demands an abundance of moisture, but it grows luxuriantly on very poor soil. It was introduced in 1923 by the Oregon Experiment station.

Some 1,011 demonstrations of the effect of various chemicals on different varieties of weeds are being carried on this year by Oregon county agents.

HOME POINTERS

PEACH NECTAR

Peel, stone and crush very ripe local peaches. To 6 quarts of the pulp add 1 quart vinegar. Let stand in an enamel or porcelain vessel for 36 hours with a cloth tied over the top of the container. Strain first through a cheesecloth bag and then through a cotton flannel one. Measure juice and add an equal quantity of sugar. Stir until dissolved. Place in a preserving kettle and boil 5 minutes, counting time when juice begins to boil. Remove at once, pour into sterilized jars or bottles, and seal tightly. Store in a cool place.

Use about 4 tablespoons of this syrup in an ice tea glass with crushed ice and water, for a refreshing beverage.

PEACH CHUTNEY

4 pound peaches
1/2 cup chopped onion
1/2 pound seeded raisins
1 pod red pepper
2 tablespoons red chili powder
2 teaspoons ground ginger
1/2 cup mustard seed
6 tablespoons salt
1 quart vinegar
1 1/4 pounds brown sugar

Put the onion, raisins, and red pepper through the food chopper. Peel the peaches, cut in small pieces, and mix with the other ingredients. Boil slowly for fully an hour, or until the chutney attains a rich brown color. It should resemble a soft gruel. Pack in hot sterile jars or bottles, seal, and process 15 minutes below boiling.
