"Low Oregon power rates enable us to meet eastern competition"

... says W. F. PRIER, President
Oregon Brass Works

HORSE SENSE SERIES... NO. 3

"WE are perfectly satisfied with our power rate, otherwise we would not have invested our money in electric furnaces.

"These one-sided discussions about high power rates are doing Portland a lot of harm. The people who are doing most of the talking know least about the actual facts. I felt so strongly on this question that I recently wrote an open letter telling why we are satisfied with our rates.

"We were the first brass manufacturers west of Chicago to install electric furnaces, and now have the largest electrical installation of any company in our line west of Chicago. These furnaces cut our shrinkage in melting—the biggest waste problem in our business—about 50 per cent under our former oil burning equipment system. Then, too, electric furnaces produce a much finer grade of metal and reduce our rejections to the minimum, which is a great advantage in the cost of production.

"The privately owned power company enabled us to take early advantage of electric furnace development by keeping us informed of that development. That was just one evidence of efficiency which has been demonstrated so many times. Could we expect that efficiency from a municipally operated power plant? We could not. Furthermore, a municipally operated business cannot operate as economically as a privately owned enterprise.

"I would very much dislike to see our city enter the brass manufacturing business. Similarly I think the power business should be left in the hands of the privately owned companies who have become expert in their line.

"A number of our products are distributed nationally, in competition with the largest eastern manufacturers, where quality and price only are considered, and such items as cheap electric power enable us to meet this competition."

Conservative, fair minded and deeply interested in Oregon's welfare, Mr. Prier and his sane opinions are worth more than all the empty arguments and fallacious reasons of sincere but impractical idealists. We quote him here to give you another example of good Oregon horse sense. Civic and industrial leaders throughout the state join with Mr. Prier in this view of the Oregon power situation.
