The Mazaroff Mystery

WNU
SERVICE

Illustrations by Irwin Myers

"Merely to be permitted to ask a few pertinent questions arising out of the death of my client," Crole said. "I may mention, first, a fact of which perhaps neither of you is aware. Mr.
Mazaroff was murdered!"

This announcement produced different effects on its two hearers. Sheila made a low murmur of horrified astonishment; Mrs. Elphinstone gave Crole a quick glance.

"Are you sure of that?" she asked.
"That is the medical opinion, ma'am," replied Crole, with a rigid bow. "I know of no reason to dispute it. My client was shot—dead."

Mrs. Elphinstone pointed a finger to chairs near her desk.

"Won't you sit down?" she said with faint politeness. "You say you want to ask me some questions—pertinent questions? I really can't conceive what they can be! I know nothing whatever about this poor man."

"I think you saw my late client the other day?" suggested Crole, whom I had fully posted in every particular of our stay at the Woodcock. "He and Mr. Holt were standing at the garden gate of the inn when you and your daughter passed by."

"Oh, that!" exclaimed Mrs. Elphinstone.
"Yes, I suppose I did see him—tall, bearded man, wasn't he?"

"You didn't recognize him, ma'am?"

asked Crole, with a keen look.

Mrs. Elphinstone gave her questioner a particularly freezing stare.

"Recognize him?" she demanded haughtily. "Really—what do you mean?"

"What I mean, ma'am, is this,"

Crole answered, bluntly. "The man whom you saw, though he has of late years called himself Salim Mazaroff, was the man whom you married some years ago—Andrew Merchison."

I expected something—say, dramatic—to follow on this. But nothing happened—that is, nothing particular. Sheila's lips opened a little in astonishment, and her eyes turned from Crole to her mother. Mrs.
Elphinstone was sitting bolt upright, very stern and dignified, at her desk.
Suddenly, and swiftly, a satirical, contemptuous smile showed itself round the corners of her finely cut thin lips, and she rose quietly from her chair.

"Follow me, if you please," she said.

She marched us through two or three rooms, into the hall, out of the house, across the grounds, looking neither to right nor left, and so through the porch of the church, and under its fine old Norman doorway into the shadowy nave. Marching up that to the chancel, she suddenly paused, pointed upward, and, giving Crole a frowning look, spoke two words:

"Look there!"

We looked. There, on the north wall of the chancel, was a plain, square tablet of Aberdeen granite, whereupon were deeply incised and gilded a few words:

"In Memory of

"Andrew Merchison

"Drowned in Mombasa Bay, October 17th, 1899."

I glanced at Crole. His face was inscrutable. He merely looked at the tablet, read the inscription, and turned, with a nod, to Mrs. Elphinstone.

"Now come back to the house," she commanded.

Mrs. Elphinstone marched us back to the house, and up the old oak staircase that led from the big hall. She went along one corridor after another until she came to a door. Selecting a key from a bunch that hung by a silver chain from her waist, she unlocked the door, and ushered us into a small room, wherein there was nothing but an old-fashioned bureau, a chair set before it, a bookcase filled with old volumes, and a side-table, whereon lay a much-worn cabin trunk. She went straight to this and laid a hand on it.

"Now," she said, looking at Crole.

"I am doing more than anyone has the right to ask me to do! I am only doing it to set at rest, once and for all, the utterly ridiculous idea that you mentioned when you came here—uninvited. You will please listen to me!—It is quite true that I married Andrew Merchison, when he and I were very young and foolish and heavily wronged. We did not get on. He made full provision for me; shared equally all he had with me; in fact, and left me. Eight months later, this girl was born. I and my friends did our best to find him, and make him acquainted with that fact; we failed.
I never heard anything of him until the early part of the year 1900, when I got a letter from the captain of a steamer which traded between Bombay and Durban. You shall read it."

She produced another key, unlocked the cabin trunk, and from a pocket inside it, took out an envelope, from which she withdrew a letter. She handed it to Crole.

"You and Mr. Holt can read that together," she said. "Read it carefully."

I read the letter over Crole's shoulder.

It was from one James Sinclair, who introduced himself as captain of the S. S. General Clive. He said that on his last voyage from Bombay he had taken on board at that port a passenger named Andrew Merchison, whom he described: Mr. Merchison was bound for Durban. In the course of the voyage, a stay was made off Mombasa. On the 17th of October, the steamer being at anchor in Mombasa bay, Mr. Merchison disappeared. The writer's belief was that Mr. Merchison had had a sudden attack of faintness or giddiness, lost his balance, and fallen overboard, probably striking his head against the side of the ship as he fell. Nothing being discovered about his passenger, he had examined his effects, found Mrs. Merch-ison's address in a memorandum book, and therefore now wrote to her and at the same time forwarded Mr. Merch-ison's cabin trunk, and all that it contained, with other small matters lying about his cabin.

The solicitor read this letter through in silence, and silently handed it back to Mrs. Elphinstone. She replaced it in the trunk.

"This trunk and its contents have remained intact ever since I received them, now many years ago," she said.

"Now you come and tell me that this stranger, calling himself Mazaroff, was in reality Andrew Merchison! Absurd!"

"Nothing absurd, ma'am, in my telling you that," retorted Crole, with the least touch of asperity. "Holt," turning to me, "you will just tell us precisely what Mazaroff confided to you, the second night of your stay at the Woodcock. Tell the whole story."

I told the whole story, as we all stood there in that little room. But, though I watched Mrs. Elphinstone closely during my narrative, I saw no sign of any wavering on her part.

"The thing's absurd!" she declared in the end. "Utterly absurd! The man was probably some adventurer who had got hold of certain facts about Merchison's past history, and wanted to make money out of his knowledge!"

HOME POINTERS

Instead of soup or fruit cup for that first course, go Continental:

Sherry Mushroom Canapes
6 mushroom caps
2 tbsps. corn oil 2 tablespoons cornstarch
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/2 cup cream
1/2 cup mushroom stock
Pepper
1 tablespoon sherry flavoring 6 rounds French Toast 2 hard boiled eggs
Parsley

Saute mushroom caps in oil five minutes and remove from pan. To oil in pan, stir in cornstarch, salt and pepper. Add cream and mushroom stock made by cooking stems with water until tender. Add sherry flavoring. On each round of French Toast place a slice of hot hard boiled egg and a mushroom cap.
Garnish with sauce and parsley or strips of pimiento and serve as a first course canape.

For a dessert that's real fun to make, try this modern version of "heavenly hash":

Date Ice Box Cake
2 cups (1 pkg.) dates (cut) 1/2 cup milk
1/2 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon vanilla 1/2 pint cream (whipped) 1/2 lb. graham crackers (crushed) 1/2 cup nut meats (cut) 2 cups (1/2 lb.) marshmallows, cut Crush the graham crackers with a rolling pin. Cut the dates and marshmallows into small pieces with wet scissors. To the cut dates add the milk, salt, and vanilla. Add nuts and marshmallows. Mix well. Add graham crackers. Add whipped cream last. Form in a cylinder. Roll the sides in graham cracker dust. Wrap in waxed paper. Let stand 24 hours.
Serve cut in slices with whipped cream or ice cream on top. 12 servings.

If you have never tried Stuffed Gingerbread, you've missed something!

PENNSYLVANIA CHILI SAUCE

24 medium-sized ripe tomatoes 8 large onions
3 green peppers
3 red peppers
1 cup sugar
4 tablespoons salt
5 cups cider vinegar
1 tablespoon nutmeg 1 tablespoon ground cinnamon 1 teaspoon ground cloves 1 teaspoon allspice Cut tomatoes in small pieces.
Grind onions and peppers through food grinder. Mix all ingredients and boil over moderate heat until sauce attains the desired consistency. Then jar immediately.
