SHOULD SPRAY FOR CURRANT MAGGOT

Sweetened poison spray applied to gooseberries and currants at the right time together with some cultural precautions will afford fairly effective means of control for the gooseberry and currant maggot. These are the small white maggots found inside the fruit of the currant and gooseberry. The adult is a rather small, lemon-yellow fly, with wings crossed by darker bands. These insects spend the winter in the soil under and near the bushes at a depth of one-half to three inches below the surface. The flies come out usually sometime around the middle of May, and after a few days lay their eggs under the skin of the fruit.

A sweetened poison spray consisting of lead arsenate, sirup and water is attractive to the flies and will kill them if sprayed lightly on the foliage when the flies are out. If showers are frequent the spray will need to be applied as often as the rain will wash it away. Frequent stirring of the surface soil under and around the bushes will decrease the amount of injury as this will destroy large numbers of the insects before they come out as adults.

STRAWBERRY PATCHES NEED INSPECTION

Strawberry root weevil are so generally distributed thru the berry growing sections of this region, that most growers cannot afford to miss giving their patches very thorough inspections. Only after such examinations indicate that weevil are not present should baiting for their control be omitted from the program for the season.

Poisoned apple pomace or bran bait used at the rate of about a teaspoonful to the plant when the adults are crawling about will effectively control this pest. Various species of the insect do not make their appearance at the same time. One variety is out now in some localities. Another will probably be working about the time the crop is picked. The baiting does not interfere with the picking or the marketing of the crop.

ON OREGON FARMS

Hillsboro—Hood wheat, a new variety tested out at the Oregon Experiment station at Corvallis, and now on trial on three Washington county farms is showing up well this spring, County Agent W. F. Cyrus reports. Results in yield and growth will be checked later in the season. The Hood is more upright growing variety and starts developing earlier than the Holland, Cyrus says, although the Holland may still prove to be the higher yielding.

Carvallis—Netted Gem seed potatoes from Crook, Deschutes, Washington and Umatilla counties will be grown in the state of Washington again this year in comparison with seed of the same variety from Idaho, Montana, Washington, and other states. County agents of these Oregon counties have been arranging with growers to send sample sacks of seeds to Washington for these trials. In past years Oregon seed has stood at or near the top in these trials.

Dallas—That the special alfalfa spring tooth harrow is superior to the ordinary spring tooth machine for cultivation of young alfalfa plantings is the conclusion of several Polk county farmers who observed demonstrations of both types of machines conducted by County Agent J. R. Peck, recently. The ordinary spring tooth, although sharper than usual, did not penetrate as deeply, and pulled out more young alfalfa than did the alfalfa tooth harrow.

Coquille—The draining of a swamp on the A. Tamba ranch through the use of three boxes of dynamite has made available more than two acres of land valued at $300 an acre at a cost of less than $30, reports County Agent George Jenkins.

KIWANIS CLUB HAS INTER-CLUB MEETING

The Peninsular Kiwanis club came to Beaverton Wednesday evening to hold an inter-club session with the Beaverton Kiwanis Club. Reports are to the effect that a very enjoyable meeting was passed and an excellent program provided by the visiting club.

Probably one happening will live in the memory of the Beaverton club, that of the many compliments paid to Pres. Leonard Adams for the very happy manner he conducted the meeting. Adams looks like a mere youth but the handling of the meeting displayed a mature comprehension of the responsibilities of the chairman of such a gathering.

Pres. Adams's tribute to Secretary Dietch received many compliments.

Chas. Fry, principal of the Roosevelt high school in Portland, was the principal speaker of the evening. He was ably assisted and his theme further exemplified by Lieut. Cross of Vancouver barracks. Both talked on doing for the boys some of the things the modern home training neglects.

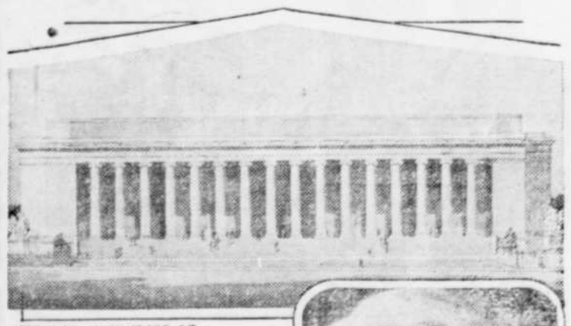
Mellon Institute to Benefit Mankind



MELLON INSTITUTE OF INDUSTRIAL RESEARCH

SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY ANDREW W MELLON

A million dollars' worth of cut stone has been ordered from the Indiana Limestone company for the magnificent Mellon Institute of Industrial Research, Pittsburgh, Pa.

First shipment of the 750 carloads of stone will go forward early this spring from the quarries at Bedford, Ind.

A striking note of the mammoth structure, which is Roman Ionic style of architecture, will be the sixty-two great monolithic columns thirty-five feet eight inches high by five feet ten inches in diameter. As quarried, the columns will weigh 284,000 pounds or 142 tons each. When finished they will weigh 64 tons each. Special cars will be used for shipping.

Housed in enduring limestone, the Institute will be a perpetual memorial to its founders. The building, designed by Janssen & Cocken, Pittsburgh, is established by the Mellon family to further the progress of industry through research for the benefit of mankind. Prominent members of the family interested in the project are Andrew Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury, and R. B. Mellon, president of the Mellon National Bank.

President A. E. Dickinson of the Indiana Limestone company declares the Mellon Institute is one of the largest cut stone contracts placed in some time. "It is a favorable indication of good prospects for 1931 construction activity."
