COACH WARREN IS SUCCESSFUL HERE

Mr. Warren's success in this school is due not only to his ability as an athletic coach but to his faculty for getting results. He has been in his 3 years in Beaverton not only a coach but a mentor to the boys. In his three years here his football teams have won 75 per cent of their games. His basketball team while not having as good an average is nevertheless as much a credit to the school and to Mr. Warren as his football teams. He has turned out state champions in track and his men have not lost a dual or triple meet in 3 years. One of the outstanding points of Mr. Warren's teams is that they work together as a team and not as individuals.

"Feast of Reason and Flow of Soul"—Name Proposed

you see, I mean what I say, an' I say this ain't no liars' club.

What we want for this club is a name, some name that'll give it a note of dignity. There's a lodge in town here called the Odd Fellows. Now the fellows belonging to that lodge may be odd all right, but it seems folks could see that for themselves, not have their bunch named "Odd." Then there's the Masons. I'll bet if there was a honest to goodness mason go up and apply to join their bunch they'd be horrified. "An' they'd blackball him, whatever that means, somethin' they do when a name's proposed and they don't want the fellow in the bunch.

"Oddfellows probably do a lot o' good, what with feedin' the hungry and tendin' the sick and buryin' the dead such like, and I've heard say the Masons do a lot o' good takin' care of poor crippled children, and keepin' up homes for the aged, an' settin' a good example by not stealin' nor cheatin' nor beatin' their neighbors, nor their lodge brothers.

"Then there is the Maccabees, an' the Woodmen, and the Royal Neighbors, an' the Eastern Stars, the Good Templars, when I was a lad there was a lodge called the Good Templars, and they said they belonged to the Independent Order of Good Templars, an' one o' the boys who liked his joke told us that the initials, "I.O.G.T.," mean "I often get tight."

A name to fit this club has got to mean somethin'. Personally I sort of like "Feast of Reason an' Flow o' Soul Club." That is some mouth-fillin' phrase. I'll bet that when we told the neighbors that we belong to the "Feast of Reason an' Flow o' Soul Club," they'd set up an' take notice o' us. They might not quite realize all that title means but they sure would have a healthy respect for that sort of a name."

B. Tonian stopped his speech, put on his glasses, then turned about so as to face the part of the dimly lighted room where his audience had been sitting when he began to talk. The light from the little kerosene hand lamp gave but a small glow about its flame, the speaker had been looking at the light, having given up early in his talk the effort to look his audience in the eye.

He peered into the corners of the room but could see nothing. He pulled his spectacles down over his nose and looked over the top of the rims. Not a soul was in sight. He stretched up his neck, much like a young rooster, bent his forehead forward, and looked again. His audience had fled.

"Well, I'll be switched. I wonder what we are goin' to name this thing anyway?"

The Colonel touring Europe on his leave of absence, did not forget the one he left behind. His son received a card from Sparta saying: "This is the cliff from which the Spartans used to throw their defective children. Wish you were here.—Dad."

OREGON CORN BELT IS BEING FORESEEN

"A crop for 200,000 Oregon Acres" is the way E. Rr. Jackman, extension crops specialist at Oregon State college, speaks of field corn. This description is now used as the title of a mimeographed booklet containing articles on corn growing in Oregon and published by the Loggers and Contractors Machinery company of Portland for free distribution.

This booklet, which contains no advertising, is made up of seven articles originally prepared by members of the Oregon State college staff for use over the radio, together with two other articles, one by a farmer telling his experiences in corn growing, and the other giving a brief history of corn growing in Oregon.

$500,000,000 LOSS TO U.S. INDUSTRY FROM COLDS

Close to 6 1/2 days is the average period of disability per person due to respiratory diseases. This is estimated to cause a $500,000,000 loss annually in wages and loss of production.

DRY HEAT DRAINS WORKERS' HEALTH

Urge Air-Conditioning to Combat Development of Respiratory Disease Epidemics.

AN IMMENSE fortune is lost by American workers each year because of colds and other respiratory diseases. According to the Holland Institute of Thermology of Holland, Mich., there is an average loss of six and one-half days work each year by every person gainfully employed because of common colds alone. The Institute conservatively estimates the loss to wage-earners caused by colds alone at $200,000,000 annually. This, of course, does not include the heavy losses incident to influenza, bronchitis, the flu, and pneumonia.

As is to be noted, colds and other respiratory diseases usually become epidemic with the commencement of the annual heating season, and reach their highest point in the cold months of January and February. Because of the concurrence of these epidemics with the shut-in life of winter, it is the consensus of authorities that the excessive heating of American homes and places of work, and the almost utter absence of moisture in indoor air constitute a contributing factor of weighty importance to the incipency and development of respiratory disease epidemics.

Two reasons may be ascribed for the lack of moisture in the home air. One is the natural phenomenon that cold air does not have the capacity for, nor does it contain as much moisture as the warm air of summer. The second reason is that old style heating systems, with which most homes are heated, not only supply too much heat, but they are not properly equipped to supply sufficient moisture to overcome the lack of moisture in winter air. The water pans in old style furnaces and the so-called humidifiers for attachment to radiators have proved wholly inadequate. However, air-conditioning experts affiliated with the heating and ventilating industry have perfected and built into modern warm air heating systems humidifiers of ample capacity to meet all house requirements. These humidifiers are of special design. They receive their water supply direct from the house water main, and have ample capacity for evaporating and injecting into the home air the water vapor from as much as 25 gallons of water per day.

These systems of the vapor air type are also equipped with an electrically operated air propeller unit which uniformly distributes the warmed and humidified air from the heater into every room of the house.

Experience has proved that where indoor air is thus adequately humidified, the home is more comfortable, more healthful, and resistance to colds and other respiratory infections reaches a high point.

BASEMENT AIR NOT UNHEALTHFUL

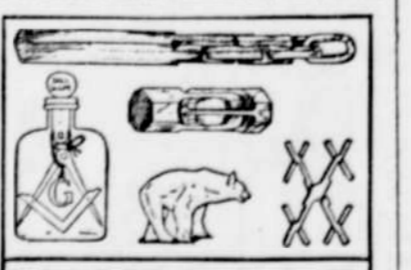

Basement air is not "bad" air. It is as fit for breathing as its air in other rooms of a building, say the engineers of the Holland Institute of Thermology of Holland, Mich. Though the basement air may seem damp, this is not indicative of an unhealthy condition, according to these engineers, and is easily explained.

The warm air of summer contains considerable moisture. Because of the coolness of the basement, persons are more sensitive to the large amount of moisture in it, and the coolness is further aggravated by lack of ventilation.

If basements are unhealthy, it is because they are not kept clean and not ventilated, declare the engineers. Basement construction represents a large share of the home cost, and the old-time prejudice born of vegetable cellars, should not prevent full use of this valuable space.

The fine, damp-proof foundations and large windows that characterize basement walls today, and compact efficient heating systems permit the use of the basement for any modern need. By installing modern warm air heating systems of the vapor air type which are equipped with an air propeller unit for circulating the house air, the basement can be well ventilated the year round. In summer the cool basement air may be utilized, by means of this unit, for making upstairs rooms more comfortable.

The exercise of ordinary care in keeping the basement clean, and in bringing will quickly demonstrate that basement space is too valuable to be utilized for storage space. Old time prejudices should not prevent full use of basement space.
