TIPS FROM A STROLLER

One of the world's greatest philanthropists was a Scotchman, Andrew Carnegie. Page Ripley!

Many of the irregularities in the speech of modern youth may be attributed to the painful efforts of radio announcers.

Christopher Columbus is a radio crooner, who sings during the Cremona hour, says a schoolboy during an examination.

Why not sanction breach-of-promise suits against successful political candidates who fail to fulfill promissory campaign statements?

Walter Scott to Walter Winchell—One, the author of immortal airs; the other, of mortal "hot airs." Which will linger in our memory?

Oregon is a Republican state, yet we vindicated Al Smith's prohibition policies by a 3 to 1 majority in the recent Literary Digest straw vote.

America's masked threat to the far East, the massing of 202 war vessels on the Pacific coast, seems to have temporarily silenced the salvos of the "Yellow Peril."

In these moments of drastic tax reduction, many school boards refuse to cut teachers' salaries as a means of relief. The world admires people who dare to be different.

According to recent statistics, Portland's infant mortality is less than 40 in 1000 births. Evidently this Oregon county is a healthy location, of which we should all be justly proud.

If the present members of the League of Nations had the courage of its original sponsor, Japan would be unceremoniously spanked and sent home. Woodrow Wilson was a great man.

We wonder if the U. S. Refinancing corporation would reimburse Al Capone for his proffered reward for the safe return of the Lindbergh baby? His present actions are more humanitarian than those which caused his imprisonment.

The Bell Telephone company in Pennsylvania is losing approximately $20,000 monthly, through the use of Chinese coins in the pay phones. We suggest the placing of Japanese guards near the booths, and thus give the public a real scrap for a nickel!

In listening to Winchell's sky traffic of Saturday night the writer had occasion to hear Frank Wykoff, world's fastest human and Johnny Dame last fall. Their remarks were sans smoking testimonials. The economic inertia is striking our athletes. too—How about it, Walter?

An Olympic year and the prospects of an early spring seems to have already created an unusual interest in Track and Field competition. The local high school reports an initial turnout of 25 men. This young fellow, Ross Hart, may prove a threat in the Pentathlon and Decathlon events, by 1936—Let's go!

Harbingers of spring have made their advent into a world which has but recently shed her winter garb. Fussy willows, trilliums, gardeners, marble games, track and baseball athletes, and signs of awakening emotions in adolescent breasts herald the arrival of spring. We, already have itchy feet, but since nature has denied us the physical equipment of the ordinary fowl, we are forced to do our scratching with the proverbial pen. In the words of my dog, "A scratch on the back is more to be desired than a shake of the paw."

A LINER TWO

Why are clouds like coachmen? Because they hold the reins. What is taken before you get it? Your photograph. Why is a dog's tail like the heart of a tree? Because it's farthest from the bark. Why is a coward like a leaky barrel? Because they both run. Why is the crow the bravest bird? Because it never shows a white feather. Why can't a fisherman be generous? Because his business makes him sel-fish. What is the best remedy for a smoky chimney? Put out the fire. —From the Beaverton Hummer

Plans are being made for the construction of a $150,000 central unit of a Jesuit Novitiate, to be erected at Paradise View farm, near Sherida.

Money to Burn

By Peter B. Kyne

STORY FROM THE START

Hiram Butterworth, miser, decides to leave his fortune to Elmer Clark, a poor neighbor. Butterworth tells Absalom McPeake, his lawyer, of a deal forty years ago in which he swindled a man out of $40,000 and arranged for payment with interest. Butterworth dies suddenly. Through a gossiping telegraph operator the towns of Pilarcitos, including Nellie Cathcart, Elmer's sweetheart, learns of his inheritance before he does. Nellie tells Elmer it amounts to more than $1,000,000. They confess their love for each other. "Colorado Charley," and his partner, Mac, decide to pluck Elmer.

Seventh installment. "Yesterday I would have replied, 'Because you've never asked me.' Today I say that I've decided not to engage myself to you until you've had ample opportunity to see the world, juggle that million dollars awhile and see what the other girls look like. If you please, Elmer, I'd much prefer to marry you after you've got used to ready money rather than before. Mean while I'll continue to love you just as devotedly as if I were wearing a diamond engagement ring as big as a headlight, and in the interim we will not discuss the matter of our future residence. After we're married I'll live wherever you want to live and be quite happy if you are happy, but if I were to be granted a preference—"

"Yes, of course," he interrupted. "That's why I asked the question."

"Strive yourself for a shock, dearest. I'd like to live in Pilarcitos."

"In this town? Why, Nellie, you're not serious—really?"

"I am, really. What's wrong with Pilarcitos?"

"Everything. It's dull, quiet, provincial—nothing doing."

"But it's a pretty town, Elmer. I like the rows of locust trees along the sidewalks; I like the pretty bungalows with roses and bougainvillea covering them; I prefer to be a householder, not a cliff dweller; I like a garden and my own little garage, and a big kennel and run for a dog; I like a big shanghai rooster for an alarm clock and I like babies and baby carriages. The country hereabouts is an Eden. God made only one Santa Clara valley. You can have London in the season, but I prefer the Santa Clara in blossom time, Elmer."

"Good Lord, Nellie, how you surprise me! Why, there are no social or intellectual contacts here, no—"

"Halt! The dust-brown ranks will stand fast!" Nellie commanded. "Only the day before yesterday, a certain altruistic, ambitious and enthusiastic young man, by name Elmer Butterworth Clark, was planning ways and means for transforming H. Wasservogel's defunct butcher shop into a number of profit-making enterprises to which he meant to cling while growing up with the country, Pilarcitos was a pretty nice town the day before yesterday, wasn't it?"

"Why, Elmer, if you lived in New York it would cost you thousands of dollars a year to support a membership in a rich man's gun club, whereas you and three other small-town sports control the best duck grounds in this county at a cost of about seventy-five dollars a year. The same is true of your trout fishing. You get just as good trap shooting in Pilarcitos as rich men do at Pinedust, and there are just as good shots here, even if most of them do wear overalls instead of plus fours."

"I'm licked. You have entirely too many reasons, Nellie."

"I have more reasons, if pressed for them."

"Well, I've been thinking I'd like to see the other side of the picture, Nellie."

Nellie's soft, brown, firm little hand came across the table and closed on Elmer's. "Dear old venturesome boy! Of course you want to see it, and you want to go prowling alone. I don't blame you. You yearn for liberty and independence and you've never known it. Elmer, step out and see the world. When you've seen all you want of it and find its rocks and dirt, noisy, gossipy, mean, cruel, good, tender and lovable people wherever you go, and that no spot on earth has a monopoly of life's pleasures, you might come back to me. I'll be glad to have you! On the contrary, if you've changed your mind about me—well, I'll understand. I'd rather have you change your mind before marriage than after it. Sometimes I think that young men who marry nowadays find hostages to fortune."

"What a remarkable philosopher you've grown to be!" he exclaimed admiringly.

"I'm a wartless, dear, I play hunches, and I have a hunch about you. Normally, you'd be big for this town, but—when pain and—" anguish wring your brow, perhaps this town will be just right for you. At any rate, it will be not less than eleven months before your Uncle Hiram's estate can be distributed to you and—"

"After a Half Minute of This He Spoke in a Voice Trembling With Rage."

CHAPTER V

WHEN Nellie returned to the bank after luncheon she went into Ansel Moody's office and for the second time perused the telegram which had arrived that morning from the First National Bank of Muscatine. It ran as follows: "McPeake's estimate of the estate extremely conservative. Their appraisal will develop double that. Our counsel here read will and pronounced it absolutely airtight and free from attack on any known grounds. Your customer sole legatee with exception one specified bequest of ten thousand. Will also instructs executor to pay a certain mortgage given to one Benedict Catherer, together with interest as per terms of mortgage. Principal sum of mortgage forty thousand dollars. In event death Elmer Clark before distribution estate his share goes to the state university. "First National Bank of Muscatine."

Nellie sighed and retired to her desk, where she figured rapidly for half an hour. As she surveyed the result of her computations a gurgling little chuckle escaped her; then, as if overcome with shame at her levity, her sea-blue eyes filled with tears.

The following day was Saturday and the Pilarcitos Commercial Trust & Savings bank closed as usual at noon. About half past eleven Ansel P. Moody summoned Nellie to his private office; when she appeared he sat and glared at her ferociously over the tops of his square spectacles. After a half minute of this he spoke in a voice trembling with rage.

"Look here, miss, if you expect to continue to work in this bank, you got ter git out of the insurance business."

Nellie sat down—uninvited. "Mr. Moody, this is the first intimation I have had that my work as an employee of this bank has been unsatisfactory. In fact, I laid the flattering epithet to my soul that I was the most efficient person on your payroll."

"You are—ah—your work's all right; I'm not kicking at that. It's your side lines that rile me."

"You're known for a year that in my spare moments I have been selling all kinds of insurance. You have not hitherto objected to that, provided my work in the bank did not suffer in consequence."

"Well, hereafter you cut it out. Hear me!"

"Focus your side lines tangle up in mine on a Friday. For instance, when I loaned Elmer Clark that twenty thousand dollars yesterday on his unsecured note, you knew I did it becuz of his prospects."

"That is quite true. I figure Elmer enough to come into his fortune; I got to have some security for that loan, don't I? What security can I get in a town like this? Nothin' except life insurance. Well, I figure Elmer won't offer no objection to takin' out a policy to protect the bank, so I stroll up to the Smoke Shoppe this mornin' an' suggest it to him. He's right agreeable an' says he's already thought o' that, for which reason he's applied for a policy with a company represented in this town by you."

"That is quite true. It occurred to me that you had overlooked suggesting the matter to Elmer when you made the loan, so I, realizing that the bank should be protected, told Elmer out to luncheon yesterday, and between the soup and the nuts I sold him a hundred thousand dollar policy. The bank is a beneficiary to the extent of any approved claim against his estate and somebody else is the beneficiary of all that's left."

"Yes, but does this bank git a fifty-fifty cut on the commission you earn on that policy?"

through County Agent Chas. W. Smith, to determine what these peas will do under favorable field conditions in that community.

Hillsboro—Joe Schmidkefer, a dairyman near Forest Grove, says that he has already sold several cows and will probably cull his herd down to about half its original size as a result of his first years membership in the Yamhill-Washington Dairy herd improvement association. Before he began testing, he says, he was planning to sell his best cows as scrubbers and would have kept cows that have now been shown to be "boobers." With the help of tester, Douglas Dickey, he has saved enough in feed rations alone to more than pay the cost of testing, he reports.

The Dalles—In an attempt to stimulate growth of cover crops before it is time to turn them under, superphosphate and sulphate of ammonia are being applied on the farms of Roy Johnson, of Thompson's addition, and Neilson Bros. of Mill Creek, on the advice of W. Wray Lawrence, county agent. Crops receiving these fertilizers are grain, hairy vetch, Austrian winter field peas, and mustard.

Dallas—The advisability of eliminating all low producing cows from all herds so as to hold down the total volume of milk production was emphasized by county agent J. R. Beck, speaking before a recent meeting of farmers in the Elkins community.

Hillsboro—The use of more alfalfa, roots, and corn for grain are recommended by County Agent W. F. Cyrus as a means by which Washington county farmers can cut costs on their dairy farms. Alfalfa seed is cheaper than ever before and this is a good year to make additional seedings, says Cyrus.

ON OREGON FARMS

Oregon City—Clackamas county's bulb industry has grown to include 120 acres of bulbs valued at $600,000 according to County Agent J. J. Inskeep. One organization is reported to have an annual payroll of $20,000.

Medford—Four Jackson county bee keepers, having a total of more than 100 colonies, are co-operating with the farm management department at Oregon State college in a cost of production survey on honey. The survey will include all sections of the state where honey is produced.

Heppner—Field trials of O'Rourke field peas from the Moro experiment station will be planted this year by O. W. Cutsforth, George Peck, R. E. Rice of Lexington, and R. A. Thompson and Chris Brown of Heppner. The demonstrations were arranged
