GOVERNMENT PAYS TRIBUTE TO INGRAM

Ingram Point, a crest in Crook County, Oregon, on the Ochoco national forest, has recently been named by the U. S. Geographic Board, in honor of the late Douglas C. Ingram, of the U. S. Forest Service.

Mr. Ingram was for many years ranger in charge of the old Mill Creek district, and later was assistant chief of range management in the regional office at Portland, Oregon. He first used this point, formerly known as Tamarack Point, as a lookout, and it is considered particularly appropriate that it be given his name, according to the regional forester's office, where the recommendation for the change in name originate.

It will be remembered that Ingram perished while fighting fire on the Chelan national forest in August, 1929. He was an expert on plants, and was well known in Oregon and Washington as a collector of plant specimens. His pictures of forest plants and flowers are among the best in the regional office collection, and he was the author of several authoritative articles on forest botany. His home at Maplewood, near Portland, was noted as the location of an unusual collection of wild plants, lilies and other plants.

"Doug" Ingram was born in Elgin, Scotland, in November, 1882. He was educated in England, and joined the U. S. forest service in 1909, working on the Deschutes and Ochoco forests until 1918, when he was made a grazing examiner, coming into the Portland office a year later. He had a wide circle of friends who will be pleased at this honor bestowed on his memory, according to the forest service.

WHO ARE THE DEAD?

"Let the dead bury their dead." So said Christ to a would-be follower who wanted first to go and bury his father.

Today, all about us, these same dead, living in the dark; blind; under the power of Satan; shut away from the life of God; without Christ; having no hope and no God in all the world. So says the Bible.

And the end? "And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire." "This is the second death."

Any escape? "I am come that ye might have life and have it more abundantly," says Jesus Christ.

Stand on this:— That God accepts Christ's death as payment in full for all your sins. That's God's word. Then Bible, Bible, Bible for your new marching orders, and prayer, prayer, prayer, for the power to go ahead in the new life, the life that God kindles when your sins are blotted out. PEGASUS WINS

Pegasus, the flying horse of Greek mythology, a creature of exceptional power and speed and now used as the symbol of General Petroleum corporation's new General Four-Star gasoline, was the motif of that company's gorgeous float in the grand floral parade of Portland's Silver Jubilee Rose Festival on June 9. In a field of 10 other beautiful floats in the industrial and wholesale section, Pegasus won second prize. The winged horse was shown leaping over snow-capped mountains. Pegasus was done in scarlet carnations, 15,000 of them, and to make the snow-capped mountains and cloud effects, 10,500 large white ponies were used. Large baskets of scarlet carnations hung from each corner of the float and a mammoth spray of deep red roses was at the front. The base of the float was in green. Each side of the base were four large white stars and the word "General" was outlined on the side of the mountain in deep blue carnations.
