What's In a Name?

A Chicago lawyer tried to register a trade mark for "Limestone Brand," a cathartic medicine. He was advised by the examiner of trade marks that it was deceptive because it contained no limestone. Whereupon, according to the Chemical Bulletin of the Chemical National Bank, New York, he prepared a remarkable brief which read in part:

"Ivory is a good trade mark for soap not made of ivory. Gold Dust Washing Powder is not made of gold. There is no bull in Bull Durham. Royal Baking Powder is not used exclusively by royalty, nor is Cream Faking Powder made of cream. Pearlina contains no pearls, and White Rock is water. There is no cream in Cream of Tartar, in Cold Cream or in Chocolate Creams, no milk in Milk of Magnesia, in Milkweed or in the Coconut. These are all as remote from the cow as the cowslip.

"There is no grape in grape-fruit, or bread in bread-fruit. A pineapple is neither pine nor apple; a prickly pear is not a pear; an alligator pear is neither a pear nor an alligator, and a sugar plum is not a plum. Apple-butter is not butter. All the butter is taken out of buttermilk, and there is none in butternuts, or in buttercups, and the flies in the dairy are not butterflies. Peanuts are not peas, and it is doubtful if they are nuts. Sailors wear pea-jackets—peas do not, they have pea-pods, which, by the way, are not fish."

The examiner of trade marks will have to dig hard and deep before he can find an argument that will match this one, so ably presented.

TAXING THE POOR

(Editorial from the Oregon City Enterprise, June 30, 1933)

The oleomargarine controversy bobs up again. It has as many lives as a stray cat. Although the people have thrown it into the river on several occasions, the last time as late as last fall, it will nevertheless appear on the July 21 ballot.

The bill levies an excise tax of four cents per pound on the sale of all oleo, and imposes an annual license fee of five dollars on dealers in the product. This time the proposal carries a "come-on" provision—a sort of catch-vote feature—very unique as a beguiling artifice. The bill apportions the proceeds from the four cent tax to the several counties according to population, to be used for indigent relief. In other words, the neediest families are taxed on the promise that their ill-spared pennies will be given back to them. This cunning pretense alone should defeat the measure. It is not the rich, or the well-to-do that buy oleomargarine, but those who are forced by lack of means to forego the more palatable and nutritious butter. And upon them it is proposed to lay a tax to support the indigent, which obligation, by all that is fair and just, belongs upon more fortunate shoulders.

In addition to its transparent chicanery, the indigent provision is manifestly contrary to the principle that the fortunate should take care of the less fortunate; that the necessary taxation therefore should fall upon the class best able to pay, and not upon the class least able to pay.

For this and other reasons, this newspaper regards the oleo bill as undesirable. The other reasons are: It constitutes disregard for principle of popular government. In face of the fact that a similar bill was voted down by increasing majorities in 1920, 1924 and only last November, the legislature in January, yielding to group pressure, so soon again seeks to impose the legislation upon the people, regardless of the expressed will of the majority.

People who order their lives by the impulse of the moment seem very loth to believe that perhaps it may be something besides a personal grudge or a spite at some one in particular which will induce anyone to take exception to the actions of an officer, a principle or a deduction.

That is very evident just now in local conditions. People are criticizing the actions of the management of one of our foremost institutions when if they will only stop and consider a moment, perhaps it is their personal feelings that are governing their actions, rather than that they are following any logical rule of reason.

Grant that your money was deposited in a bank. You put it there. No one went out into the street and dragged you in and made you place it there. Supposing you had bought bonds, could you get dollar for dollar for them at the price at which you bought them? Or stocks? The bank may be in a similar condition. Supposing you had purchased real estate. Could you realize on it today what you paid for it? Or it might have been a stock of groceries, a garage, or any one of an unlimited number of items. Is it worse for the money in a bank to depreciate in value than for your bonds to depreciate? And is not that very depreciation of "the dollar," this so-called inflation, just what you have wanted? Now, take the proposed new charter for Beaverton. Goodness knows we need a new charter. Certain people have been advocating the adoption of a new fundamental document for Beaverton for a number of years. Last summer a little was done, not perhaps so much as should have been, but a start was made.

There is one now written. It has many good points. It certainly is specific in a number of places. There are others where it is not quite so specific.

For instance, it would adopt the boundaries of the city as previously defined. But one of the strong objections of the former charter is that the city boundaries were altogether too vague.

There is the matter of bonding the city. It would seem that under the title of "Public utility certificates" the Council could issue an unlimited quantity at its pleasure. We know that the present incumbents would not issue them, but what of future Councils, would they be so considerate?

Five hundred dollars for an emergency fund for which no account is required seems too far to go when $4,116.00 represents the total tax raised last year for all purposes excluding the sinking fund and interest on bonds voted by the people.

Another item which seems a little extravagant is a little matter of $5,000 for advertising purposes, which is larger than the whole assessment for carrying on the city's business.

There is no personal element in these criticisms. We are merely suggesting that Beaverton residents make themselves familiar with the proposed new charter by reading it. It is proposed for your law. If it is a good law, let's adopt it. If the good points outnumber the bad, by all means adopt it. But if it is not such a law as you want, then vote against it.

Jailer Gets Jolt

Bang! Crash! Earthquake—prison rocks—cell doors swing open—chains on prisoners' arms drop loose—jailer awakens—sees doors open—supposes prisoners gone—draws sword to kill himself.

Hear Paul, Apostle, shout—"Do thyself no harm. We are all here."

Jailer calls for a light; springs in; comes trembling; falls down before Paul and Silas, with, "What must I do to be saved?"

Yes, Mr. Jailer, the eternal God who can toss prisons, open doors, knock off chains, hold back prisoners—the eternal God has smashed into your little world and you find yourself not fit. And Paul's next words to you are God's words to every lost and seeking soul, "Believe (lay hold on) the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved."

Jailer made the great decision, for the Word adds that he laid hold on Jesus Christ, and rejoiced. And you? Old Time Religion, Beaverton, Ore. adv

GROCERS ASSOCIATIONS OPPOSE TAX

Renewed opposition to oleomargarine taxation has just been voiced by both the National Association of Retail Grocers, and the Portland Grocers and Merchants' Association.

Announcement to this effect was made public this week by the Oregon Anti-Food Tax League. The two associations, representing several thousand grocers in Oregon, as well as hundreds of thousands of grocers in the country as a whole, are opposing the oleomargarine tax on the ground that it is unfair to the consumer and merchant alike.

The attitude of the Portland association is expressed in the following words by G. J. McPherson, secretary:

"Our association feels that this proposed tax, which would impose a serious hardship upon the poor, and at the same time would work an injustice upon the grocers of the State, should be defeated at the polls on July 21, and we expect to do all we can to that end. We feel, further, since the people of Oregon have voted down similar oleomargarine legislation on three different occasions, that further attempts toward discriminatory tax on this product should stop.

"This surely is not the time to increase the cost of living and the cost of doing business by enacting class legislation. We are in sympathy with the ambitions of the dairy interests to better their economic position, but our investigation of this issue has convinced us that these interests would not benefit, but that the people would suffer."

AQUATIC GARDEN IS BUILT BY STUDENTS

An aquatic garden, 70 by 90 feet, has been constructed on the campus of the Southern Oregon Normal School at Ashland, and within two years is expected to contain hundreds of native and imported plants. It was constructed entirely by students, who did most of the work during a "campus day." Flowers and plants have been donated, and the garden is soon expected to be one of the show places of Southern Oregon.

Summer is Season When Lamb Chops Come Into Their Own

By Jane Rogers

THIS is the season for lamb chops. True they are a highly acceptable meat offering at any time of the year but it is in the summer that lamb chops really come into their own.

The reason for this seasonal popularity perhaps is that we tire of salads and long for some of the substantial meat dishes, which are the backbone of winter menus. It is asking too much, though, to expect the housewife to stand over a hot oven for an hour or two while a roast browns, while the thermometer outside the kitchen door soars above ninety.

Broiled lamb chops are always a happy solution. There is just enough delicious meat on a chop to satisfy the natural craving for meat and they are easily prepared. They go well with the lighter fresh vegetables and salads and too, they are easily adapted to platter dishes which are always popular in hot weather.

One important point to remember in the preparation of lamb chops is that they must be properly seasoned to obtain the full flavor of the meat. As in the cooking of vegetables, a dash of sugar, along with the salt and pepper is needed to round out the seasoning. This touch of sugar is not enough to sweeten, but acts as a blending agent for the other seasoners. Here is a recipe which is worth trying.

Broiled Lamb Chops

Heat the broiler well and rub the bars with fat. Dust the chops with a mixture of 1/2 teaspoonful each of sugar and salt and a dash of pepper. Place one inch from the flame until well seared and brown, and finish cooking further from the heat. For rare chops cook only 7 to 10 minutes, longer if you like them better done. When pan broiling, heat a heavy skillet very hot, brush with fat and proceed as in broiling.
