ON OREGON FARMS

This came through the winter in fine shape, showing no injury from the severe weather.

RACING MEET FEATURE OF STATE FAIR

'They're off!' And around the dirt track at the Oregon state fairgrounds some of the fastest horses in the United States will let hoofs fly in a six-day racing meet, a feature of the state fair, September 4-9. Horse racing has come back into its own under Oregon's new legalized racing law. More than 300 of the finest horses will be entertained in the state fair meet, according to Max Gehlar, fair director. Right from a track near Portland, where William P. Kyne of San Francisco is conducting a 20-day racing meet ending August 19, will come the pick of horses. The animals will be stabled in the regular fairground stock barns, some remodeled for that purpose, and take daily workouts on the track. Then on Labor Day the horses will be ready to give Mr. and Mrs. Racing Fan a real treat. Legalized horse racing with its pari-mutual betting system is proving a big attraction at Kyne's meet. Hundreds have been crowding the grandstands to witness the comeback of horse racing in Oregon. And thousands are expected to be in the new $150,000 grandstand at the Oregon state fair on Labor Day. Part of the track receipts will go to help pay off the debt that still hangs over the new grandstand.

At a meeting of the State Racing Commission in Portland last week, the Commission requested that the one half-mile fairground track be reconstructed into a mile track, giving Oregon the best racing plant on the Pacific Coast north of Agua Caliente, Mexico. However, that request entails several engineering difficulties and considerable cost, Max Gehlar, state fair director, says. He is considering the proposal, however. Both the present half-mile track and the new grandstand are built into space formerly occupied by the old mile track, Gehlar says. Since the state of Oregon has more than $250,000 invested in its fairground racing plant, Senator Julian Mfadden of Corvallis believes it should boast of a mile track. The chairman of the State Racing Commission declared at the meeting that a mile track could be constructed and would not exceed ten per cent of the cost of a mile track any place else in the state. Should a mile track be constructed at the fair-grounds it is believed that the Salem track would win nation-wide fame as did the old Lone Oak track of some years ago. Since the mile track was abandoned about 13 years ago, however, the lone oak tree from whence the track got its name has died. Now, since horse racing is back, Max Gehlar says he is open to suggestions for a new name for the track. He will appreciate names from any part of the state. Also with the announcement of the racing meet comes the appointment of Dr. W. H. Lytle as superintendent of speedway events. 'Dr. Lytle knows his horses,' Gehlar said, 'and his presence at the track will insure speedy races on time.'
