LARGE LOSS WHEN SAWMILL IS BURNED

The mill near North Plains which was owned by H. W. Hunt and his sons, H. G. Hunt and R. A. Hunt, was destroyed by fire of a possible incendiary origin Wednesday. The loss to the sawmill is estimated at about $15,000. There was no insurance.

Having been built only since less than two years ago, the mill had run only since last summer. About 30 men will be out of employment because of it.

The fire was not discovered until it had swept over much of the plant, consuming thousands of feet of lumber and the loading docks in addition to the mill. Three trailers for logging trucks and some saws were saved.

This is the second mill owned by the elder Mr. Hunt which has been lost by fire. A third plant which he was operating was destroyed in the Pumpkin ridge fire two years ago.

Mr. Smart: "It takes all sorts of people to make a world."

Miss Snob: "That may be—but I'm glad I'm not one of them."

EDITORIAL

Not having attended the Depositors' Meeting held at the high school Thursday evening of last week, we are refraining from making any report. We have however a few comments to make on the situation which seem to us pertinent.

Why is a certain periodical clamoring for liquidation? Is it because the publisher has a considerable money in those restricted deposits which he is afraid to have handled by any other than the Superintendent of Banks? Or perhaps he thinks that he can make investments now the appreciation of which will more than offset the loss he is sure to suffer during the process of liquidation? Or perhaps he has a personal axe to grind? Or he would feed fat an ancient grudge? To us it seems the last suggestion is most probable.

What is there to be gained by a depositor by liquidation? This—the advantage of immediate cash with which to buy on a rising market, securities, mortgages, perhaps notes or other paper owing to the bank. But what of the other, the smaller, depositor, who, perforce will be obliged to suffer a pro rata loss from what the larger depositor gains on the papers purchased at forced sale from the bank's liquidators.

The agreement presented at the meeting was drawn up by the attorney for the state banking superintendent, and not by an attorney hired by the bank as has been suggested, yes, freely charged. Of this we have been assured by an unquestionable authority.

There has been another extension of time granted until the twentieth, today. What will be the outcome? We are frank to confess we don't know. If the Banking superintendent doesn't crack down, possibly some other solution can be worked out.

Here is what seems to us. We need a bank here. A depository for trust funds is not such an institution. We feel that concerted effort would bring about the opening of an honest to goodness bank.

In the above we hope and trust that no one will read any personal animosity towards any person or party. It is the good of the whole community we wish, not the undoing of some person nor the upholding of any person who is standing in the way of the welfare of this community. But we certainly do not see why a certain publication is so interested in the liquidation of financial matters in which it has no pecuniary interest.

"SITTING PRETTY" TO BE SHOWN HERE

Sparkling with hit tunes by Mack Gordon, and Harry Revel, the glamour of eighty of Hollywood's most beautiful chorus girls and the inimitable fun-making of Jack Oakie, Jack Haley, Ginger Rogers and Thelma Todd, the Paramount musical-comedy hit "Sitting Pretty", is the feature chosen by the Ritz Theatre for Sunday, Monday and Tuesday.

"Sitting Pretty" was produced by Charles R. Rogers under the direction of Harry Joe Brown for Paramount and was adapted from a story by Nina Wilcox Putnam.

ATHLETES FROM TWO STATES TO MEET

Pacific university will be host to high schools of Oregon and Southwestern Washington Saturday for the twelfth annual interscholastic track and field meet at the campus. The event is usually a post-season event after the state meet. This year, however, it is scheduled early.

Beaverton, Hillsboro and Forest Grove teams are among those who will enter. Portland schools will not be entered this year.

Oregon Farmers

Klamath Falls—Expecting a serious grasshopper infestation, livestock growers of Klamath county are planning to purchase some 30,000 turkey poultis this spring to aid in keeping them in check. Funds have not been available for control measures, such as destroying egg beds, and this fact, coupled with the mild weather, indicates hordes of these insects will menace crops this year.

Hillsboro—Pasturing back early seeded vetch fields enough to check their growth may aid somewhat in controlling injury from aphids which have made their appearance in considerable numbers in some of the fields that have made a good growth, says W. F. Cyrus, county agent. In warm, sunny weather aphid injury increases, Mr. Cyrus says, unless some control measures are taken. Warm rainy weather encourages the development of a fungus on the aphids, which had begun to show to some extent early in March. The aphids are usually found right in the tip of the vetch plant where they do most of their damage, according to Mr. Cyrus.

Corvallis—A mixture of corrosive sublimate, arsenic and common salt in equal parts will prolong the life of ordinary green fir posts, and their usefulness for such purposes as hop poles and fences can often be doubled by this treatment. This information is based on the experience of several telephone companies in the Willamette valley, according to T. J. Starker professor of forestry. To treat a post or pole, bore a three-fourths inch hole in it about six inches above the ground, slanting it downward. Put a tablespoonful of the mixture in the hole and cork it up. One hole is enough for a four-inch post and two holes for an eight-inch post.

Mother (to six-year-old son): "Donald, do you want some French fried potatoes?"

Donald: "Mother, why is it you always ask me if I want the things I like? The things I don't like you just give me."

Afraid of To-Morrow?

You live in fear? A nameless dread grips you?

Let the Lord Jesus Christ be back on earth—be as near and personal to you as He was to Peter and James and John, the Apostles. There He stands, raising a dead man back to life, say. Or feeding the five thousand by multiplying a lad's five loaves and two small fishes. And next He turns to you and says that for the next hour you are to leave it all to Him. Couldn't you quit being scared that long and rest on the Everlasting Arms? And if for one hour, then the next also, and the next. Couldn't you trust Him that way?

"Casting all your care upon Him, for He careth for you," says the Book. No twilight zone; no half-way ground. You born-again ones are either going through on God-power and having victory over sin, worry and self or else you are limping along on your poor little human resources, no better off in that respect than our unsaved friends of whom the Bible says "having no hope and without God in the world." Sure—Christ says, "I am come that you might have life and have it more abundant." Rev. George N. Taylor, Beaverton, Oregon. adv

Variety and Proper Seasoning Are the Secret of Successful Economy in the Preparation of Left-overs.

NOWADAYS, when all of us, from the bride who is taking her first steps in the kitchen to the experienced household manager, are keeping a strict watch on the family account book, it behooves us to give thought to the clever use of left-overs, particularly meats, which come most often in this class. One of the greatest virtues of French home cookery, one which has put the national cuisine on such a high level, is the artful use of what remains of today's dinner for another day's meal.

Variety and proper seasoning are the two vital points in making the left-over popular. Whenever possible it is wise to let a day elapse between the original entrance of the roast and its reappearance under another name. And that brings up another good rule—always change the form in which the food is prepared for the second serving. The remains of a roast of lamb, for instance, reheated on the bone, make a most unappetizing spectacle; but minced lamb pie, topped with lightly browned mashed potatoes, and delicately seasoned with a little onion, salt, pepper and sugar, is a tempting dish for even the most finicky.

Careful seasoning is of utmost importance in bringing out all the flavor of the meat on the second heating. A large part of the French-woman's success can be laid to her inherited knowledge of seasoning, and she has always looked upon sugar as a seasoning for savory foods. Used this way, in small quantities, usually equal to the salt, it heightens flavors, blends other seasonings, and gives an added piquancy to the dish. A wise housewife keeps sugar, like salt and pepper, within easy reach for all seasoning purposes, especially for reclaiming the contents of the refrigerator.

JOHNSON URGES GAS PRICE REGULATION

Representative J. O. Johnson candidate for re-election as representative from Washington County, will continue his active interest in the matter of gasoline price regulation in the State of Oregon. During the 1933 session Representative Johnson led the fight against the gasoline monopoly, and in his platform for re-election he advocates a law declaring gasoline a public utility and subject to price regulation. The major oil companies who have controlled gasoline bitterly fought House Bills 309 and 310 which were submitted by Johnson during the last session. Both were directed at the monopoly and control of prices by major companies.
