DAD'S STORY

Have located the name of the chap who would not sit on the floor. His name is Vernon Spencer. His father was a stock drover, a profitable business at that time.

Mr. Shannon, an elderly gentleman, asked me to go with him to an entertainment at Milford one evening during the winter. We saw there the "Celebrated Chicago Boy Choir" so the program stated. They were boys, perhaps ten or twelve years of age and singers, some of the best it has been my fortune to hear.

They sang the verse, "What is the game that all the pappers talk so much about? Baseball, baseball."

What is the game that everybody talks about? Baseball, baseball. Why is it little Johnnie tells the boss that he is sick, And asks if he will let him off to see the doctor, quick?

He is seated in the bleachers and by chance he looks across, The batter hits the ball a whack, and in the crowd it's lost, Johnnie makes a run for it and bumps into the Boss,

They both ran after the baseball. The four boys then line up, batting position, the pitcher makes the motion to throw the ball, the batter swings his bat, the catcher grabs the imagined ball, pegs it back to the pitcher, the umpire holds up his first right finger, "Strike ONE!" he shouts, and so on for strike two and three. Then they face the audience quickly. "Oh, what a shake! Excitement is intense, Gee, but it's immense,

When you go to a baseball game!" Then for an encore they sang, "Take me out to the ball game, take me out with the crowd, buy me some candy and crackerjack, I don't care if I never come back, Let me root, root, root, for the home team, if they don't win it's a shame. For it's one, two, three strikes, you're out in the baseball game." That was the chorus, the first verse goes like this.

Katy Casey was baseball mad, had the fever and had it bad, Just to root for the home town crew, Katy blew, every sou, On a Saturday her young beau called to see if she'd like to go to see a show,

But Miss Kate'd say "No, I'll tell you what we shall do." In the old stuff that I carry around with me is some specimens of school work done in the school there at Wixom, and one of the specimens is a map of the place. I dug it up the other day, and there were some of the names that had got away from memory.

It was there that I joined the Grange again. Did not attend much, but Berto Holden was one of the state officers and they were going to hold the state grange in Traverse City that year. Lady Luck decreed that that suit with the Basket Factory over the timber would come up at the same time the State Grange convened so I got a week's leave and went home and found the suit called off as detailed in a former installment. But I had a jolly time; Mrs. Holden, the only lady in the party was a wonderful hostess and listening on the side lines I learned something of the vast political power of the grange.

Charles Townsend was coming up for U. S. Senator and he was very attentive to every one. He got elected and I always thought the way he courted the Holdens had a lot to do with his election.

The Maccabees also were prominent there and I had just joined the organization before leaving Traverse City. But I never got to attend only one meeting there at Wixom. Seemed I was busy every meeting night.

The State Teachers Association met that year at Saginaw, not so very far from Wixom, and I along with Miss Rockwell, the primary teacher, whose name I found among my papers, another teacher and a Miss Edith someone, I can't think who, attended. And some party that was. We got off the train, carried our suit cases to the middle of the street car track and sat down on them to wait for the car. Giggie, I never heard such carryings on. There, I mean at the association, we heard Dr. Dwight Hillis, Brooklyn preacher, another doctor who wrote for the Cosmopolitan magazine, Woods Hutchinson, I think, and the world fa-

The SNAPSHOT GUILD

Prove Your Angling Ability

TODAY'S Snapshot Guild is directed to all wives, husbands, daughters and sons who follow the great outdoor sport of fishing. What has fishing to do with amateur photography? Just this. The Chicago Izaak Walton League, according to news dispatches, has included in its curriculum, in the fishing school conducted in Wisconsin, a "course of truthfulness." War has been declared against the angler who persists in telling about the "big one that got away." The law of the Izaak Walton League of Chicago regarding this phase of the art of fishing is very brief and to the point. Here it is, "Get your fish, take his picture or keep quiet."

No one in particular is being accused of telling little white lies about the "whopper" that got away but Chicago's Izaak Walton League law should be recognized throughout the country. "The old adage about the cake might be revised to—"You can have your fish and eat it too" for although the fish may end its days in frying pan or broiler, a picture of it will live forever.

There is one thing to remember in taking snapshots on fishing trips. Just as you use different kinds of bait for catching various species of fish so you must vary your methods of taking snapshots under different lighting conditions.

Suppose, for instance, that you are deep sea fishing or out in the middle of a lake under the glare of a mid-July sun. One of your party gets that long-hoped-for jerk on his line. If you have one of the average folding cameras it should be ready for action with the diaphragm opening set at f.11 and the shutter speed set at 1/100 of a second. This setting of the diaphragm and shutter will serve two purposes. First—you will have the proper exposure and second—at 1/100 of a second you will stop the action as your lucky angler friend pulls the fish out of the water and into the boat.

If you have a box type camera use the second stop opening. In snapping the picture with this type of camera you will get the best results if you wait until the fish is safely in the boat and then snap the picture after the catch and when your subject is not in motion.

Let me caution you, however, against a common error. Don't forget to set your camera for distance if it is of the focusing type. If you have a fixed focus camera don't get closer to your subject than about eight feet unless you use a portrait attachment.

Now—suppose you are fishing on a river where the trees obstruct much of the light. Snaphooting under such conditions requires a different technique. Unless you have a camera with an f.8.3 lens or faster you had better forget about fast action pictures and confine your efforts to taking your subjects when not in rapid motion.

If you have a box type camera you should open it to a large stop and with the average folding camera open the diaphragm to f.8 or f.11 and set the shutter speed at 1/25 of a second. And remember—"Get your fish take his picture or keep quiet."

by the awe-struck manner of her visitor.

To get to Leland one left the train at Kurtz landing and took a boat down a chain of lakes, or one could go up towards Empire and take the stage for six miles. I always liked the water, so went by boat. The Schwartz boys had a boat which met the train twice a day and took passengers and freight to Leland. Otto ran the engine, but when school started he let his father take care of the engine on the trips and he came to school, a tall, lanky dark complexioned German lad.

Dalton was the name of another family living there. There were a boy and a girl from that family. The first two weeks I boarded with an old lady who kept house for a number of fishermen. These fishermen spread their nets during summer months and as late in the fall as the weather permitted in Lake Michigan. But their catch was as nothing to some of the catches made on the Pacific Coast when salmon are running. All in all, fishing, and especially fresh water fishing, is an uncertain business. When things go well the fishermen live in luxury, but several seasons of bad catches in a row will reduce them to stark want.

The Sogge family were fishermen but there was another something in their blood which gave at least one of them the unquenchable spark of ambition that drives men to do great deeds. Richard Sogge had finished the eighth grade when I came to Leland. He helped his father fish as long as the weather would permit and then one evening he came to the school house where I was preparing the work for the next day and after telling me who he was, he asked if I would help him go on with his studies. Of course I was flattered and delighted.

He came to school about a week when one night he gathered up his books and started to carry them from the room. I inquired the trouble and he told me the School Board had told him that he was not to go there, that they were hiring me to teach only to the eighth grade, and that he must take the eighth over again, which they at first thought he was going to do when he asked them if he could go back to school, and that they would not have me giving him ninth grade work during school hours.

A Boomerang

A prominent banker fell in love with an actress and decided to marry her, but to make certain her background was without blemish, he employed a private detective to report on her life.

Report: "The lady has an excellent reputation, her past is above reproach, she has an excellent circle of pleasant friends—the only breath of scandal is that lately she has been seen a great deal in the company of a banker of doubtful repute."
