Couple Are Wed at C. E. Johnson Home

Bride, Miss Carmen Thouvenal, Is Dressed in White With Veil

MRS. R. C. DOTY PLAYS

The Rev. Chas. Clarke of the Local Congregational Church Officiates

The home of Mrs. C. E. Johnson near Beaverton was the scene of an impressive candlelight ceremony, Saturday evening, when Miss Carmen Thouvenal, daughter of J. D. Thouvenal of Condon, became the bride of Edward Campbell of Boise, Idaho. The Rev. Chas. Clarke of the Beaverton Congregational church officiated.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her brother-in-law, Mr. George H. Inman, wore a dress of white satin, made with tight bodice, and fitted toe-length skirt. Her full-length tulle veil was held in place about her hair with orange blossoms. She carried a shower bouquet of pink rosebuds and white sweet peas, tied with a white moire ribbon.

Miss Louise Thouvenal, her sister's only attendant, wore a frock of yellow net and carried a bouquet of yellow rosebuds, and white sweet peas, tied with a green bow.

William D. Campbell of Lexington, Oregon, was best man for his brother.

Before the ceremony, Mrs. G. I. Inman sang "All For You". Mrs. R. C. Doty of Beaverton played the wedding march from Lohengrin.

The ceremony was read under a canopy of green, studded with corn flowers and pink gladioli.

The wedding, attended by over sixty relatives and friends of the young couple, was followed by a reception. Mrs. G. I. Inman and Mrs. William D. Campbell presided at the beautifully appointed table centered by a bouquet of asters and lighted by tapers.

Mr. and Mrs. Campbell left soon after the ceremony for Corvallis, Oregon, where Mr. Campbell is a member of the teaching staff of the High school.

For travelling, the bride wore a dress of red plaid trimmed in brown with brown accessories.

Those coming from a distance for the wedding were Mrs. J. H. Kingsley, the groom's grandmother, and Miss Margaret Campbell and Mr. Harley Campbell, the bridegroom's brother and sister.

CONTROL OF WEEDS IS IMPORTANT NOW

This is the time of year that farmers are frequently asking about killing or controlling wild morning glory and Canadian thistle. Most of the crops have been harvested and the wild morning glory is now coming up nice and green. The idea of getting rid of it so that it will not bother another season's crops is prominent in the minds of those farmers who have these weed pests.

For either of the two weeds mentioned, seeding oats and vetch on the land in the fall is the beginning of what should prove one of the most economical methods of control. Vetch and oats grow rather rank and would draw heavily upon the moisture supply next spring. This means that when the hay crop is taken off the ground will be rather dry and if the weed patch is then plowed, there will ordinarily be so little moisture that the weeds do not grow as readily as when cultivation is started early in the spring. By repeating cultivation frequently enough so that no green growth appears, the weeds may be killed out, although more than one season will be required. If the suggested method is followed the first season, the land seeded back to oats and vetch the second fall and the same treatment followed a second summer, the morning glory or thistle will usually be just about cleaned up.

If enough time elapses between cultivations to allow the weeds to come up and get above the ground, they never will be killed out. They must be kept out of sight.

Chemicals, particularly sodium chlorate, will kill out weeds, but on a patch of any size it is entirely too expensive to use. Nor can it be used in orchards or around shrubbery. Weeds have been killed out in Washington county by frequent cultivation as outlined previously. When this method failed it was usually because cultivations were too far apart and leaves or buds appeared upon which the roots were fed.

Quick grass is another bad weed that should be plowed in the summer when it is dry. Dry plowing is one of the most effective control measures for quick grass. Weeds that set seed and are either biennial or annual in habit are much more easily controlled, as all that is then necessary is to prevent them from going to seed.

Heavy Schedule for Local Football Team

Weight of Men To Average Fifteen Pounds More Than Ever Before

LETTERMEN RETURN

Basketball Practice Is Started Under Edwin Zumwalt

With probably the heaviest schedule ever assigned them, the Beaverton squad will this year meet their opponents with a team that averages about fifteen pounds to the man heavier than any team ever before assembled on the local high school gridiron. This year the team will average about 160 pounds while in former years 145 was about the heaviest the locals could assemble.

Nine lettermen responding to the call to practice Wednesday were included in a squad that numbered upwards of forty boys. Head coach Ed. Warren will be assisted by Edwin Zumwalt, a new arrival at Beaverton. Zumwalt will also have charge of basketball; regular practice has been started. There will be two lettermen playing basketball this year, Gibson and Emmors.

Four lettermen will be in the backfield on the football team: Emmors at full, Barron at quarter, Barry at left half, and Bielmann at right half. In the line, the lettermen will be represented by Klein and Wheeler at ends, Hetu at guard and D. Sipe and B. Sipe as tackles.

The schedule includes ten games, five here and five away. Among the hardest opponents will be Commerce of Portland, McMinnville, Corvallis, and the old rivals, Hillsboro, Forest Grove, and Tigard.

The schedule is as follows: Sept. 27, Commerce, here. Oct. 4, Milwaukie, here. Oct. 11, at Rainier. Oct. 18, at Corvallis. Oct. 25, Vernonia, here. Nov. 1, at Hillsboro. Nov. 11, Forest Grove, here. Nov. 15, at Seapouise. Nov. 22, McMinnville, here. Thanksgiving, at Tigard.

NEW U. OF O. DIVISION IN SOCIAL SCIENCE

To train young men and women for what is today regarded as the field offering a great opportunity—that of social welfare—the University of Oregon will establish the Division of Social Work, a branch of the college of social science, and will open it in Portland, this month, Dr. James H. Gilbert, dean of the college, announced.

A faculty of outstanding experts and authorities in the field of social work will be headed by Dr. Elton H. Moore who will serve as professor of social training as well as head of the division. Dr. Moore, who has been professor of sociology at Oregon State College for the past seven years, has had previous experience in teaching social work, and has written extensively on this topic.

Headquarters of the division will be in the Oregon building where Dr. Moore will have his office in room 808.

The Division of Social Work, which will be conducted under the auspices of a large number of welfare agencies, will be on a strictly graduate basis, in accordance with the standard set up by the American Association of Schools of Social Work. For admission to the division a student must have a bachelor of arts or science degree from an accredited college or university. The student's undergraduate work must include fundamental studies in social science, especially in sociology, psychology and economics.

Students in the new division will not only receive intensive classroom instruction, but will spend considerable time in actual practical experience in case work and field work, under the supervision of the faculty and of the staffs of the various social welfare agencies in Portland. When the course, which calls for 48 hours of credit, is completed the students will be fitted for positions in various governmental agencies, as well as those in local and municipal social work.

Mrs. Geo. Keller of West Slope has filed suit recently, against Walter and Ray Schallberger for $195 damages alleged done to her car in an accident which happened on the McChesney road near the W. F. Hart residence last June. The case will be heard in Justice Thynge's court before a jury.

Leland Shaw is attorney for the plaintiff and E. B. Tongue for the defendants.

Pacific International to Celebrate Silver Anniversary

Above is shown an aeroplane view of the present vast quarters of the annual Pacific International Livestock Exposition located on the outskirts of Portland. Eleven acres under one roof.

In 1911—twenty-four years ago—the Pacific International Livestock Exposition was founded by the Portland Union Stockyards company, with William H. Daugherty, president; O. M. Plummer, secretary-treasurer and D. O. Lively as general agent, backed by Swift and Company.

These men of vision saw immense possibilities in such an enterprise, and this year the Pacific International celebrates its silver anniversary October 5 to 12 in Portland, Oregon. O. M. Plummer has been with the organization from its beginning and today is general manager.

Each succeeding year has seen a gradual growth of this outstanding western event until today it is ranked as one of the finest of its kind in America.

Early indications are that this year's silver anniversary will be an even greater show than in past years with a record-breaking attendance.

Of interest to all visitors at the Exposition will be the extensive industrial display—much space has already been reserved and officials are confident that this year will exceed all others both in number and in size of displays.

The display of fish and game is the State Game Commission's the Dairy Products, and Truth in Meats Exhibit, as well as those arranged by the several counties in the state, are always of interest.

The usual livestock exhibits, including dairy animals, beef cattle, swine, draft horses, sheep, poultry and pet stock, wool and mohair, will prove not only interesting but educational to all visitors.

Officials have arranged to repeat the Horse Show and Rodeo again this year. This colorful event is becoming more popular each year of the Exposition.

Only ace riders of the rodeo world and open range have been invited to participate by McCarty and Elliott, managers of the Rodeo who are bringing their string of famous outlaw broncs, Brahma steers and tough necked long horns.

Keen competition is assured by the offer of liberal cash prizes for bronc riding, bareback riding, bull-dogging, Brahma steer riding, and other events.

The combined Horse show and Rodeo will be held in the indoor arena of the Pacific International pavilion. Both afternoon and evening performances are scheduled.
