"Bud" Miller, Cecil Barnes, Chas. Daves and Wm. McAllen were among those to suffer most from the drenching taken at the fire Monday morning. Could the City Council see their way to spend a little money for firemen's turn-out clothes to help protect these lads who work so valiantly to put out fires, there would be less liability of their becoming the victims of pneumonia. Even three or four suits would be a big help. Other suits could be purchased as the funds were provided.

Frank Knox Public Citizen

Services to Nation Make Him a Presidential Possibility.

Over-age for the draft, able to command influence if he wanted an officer's commission or a softer berth, Frank Knox enlisted as a "duck private" in the New Hampshire militia in 1917 when the United States became involved in the World War. No militarist, but a profound patriot when his country needed men, Knox, qualified by his previous service in Cuba, quickly found himself in an officer's training camp over his protest. He served throughout the war with the artillery train of the 78th division, participating in the St. Mihiel and Argonne campaigns. He came home this time with his hearing slightly impaired, although it was believed for weeks that an unexpected discharge of artillery had deafened him for life. The first day home he reported for work in a long-tailed coat, all he had saved from his "civvies" before going to war a second time.

Knox's success in New Hampshire attracted the attention of Publisher William Randolph Hearst. When invited by Mr. Hearst to take charge of his Boston papers, Knox, who was in no sense a candidate for the job, fixed what he regarded as a prohibitive price on his services. To his astonishment, Mr. Hearst agreed and Knox ran the papers for a year with such success that he was tendered the general managership of the entire Hearst chain of papers. In that job Knox applied the same general rules of budget balancing and editorial integrity which he had followed all his life.

Once again, Knox found himself traveling the length and breadth of the land, acquiring and applying a knowledge of local affairs, sectional interests and meeting the leading business men, statesmen and politicians everywhere. When he retired from this post in 1928 he expected to settle down in Manchester with his wife in a new home especially adapted in design and site to a troublesome throat ailment from which Mrs. Knox had suffered for several years. But Knox found he was not the kind of a man who can retire until the last horn is blown.

In 1929 Walter A. Strong, publisher of The Chicago Daily News, suddenly died. The newspaper was an institution in the city of Chicago, devoted to the public service, independent, read and believed in by the citizens of that city. Under Victor F. Lawson and Strong the paper had set a standard for American journalism for more than fifty years.

Knox, without enough money of his own to buy such an expensive property, came into the picture with Theodore T. Ellis, a successful manufacturer of press accessories. Theirs was not the highest bid. It was sold to them after the executors and directors had canvassed the country for a man of character eligible to conduct a newspaper on the high standards it had acquired. The principal editors and publishers of the country individually assured all inquirers that in Knox the right man for the job had been found.

Knox has run The Chicago Daily News on the same principles that made him successful at the Soo and in Manchester. He has stood manfully behind the forces of law and order which has brought the underworld in Chicago to its knees—the same old fight he fought at Sault Ste. Marie in his earlier days. His campaign for a new political conscience, in which courage and common honesty stand out as its chief characteristics, is showing results. He has improved the financial position of his newspaper, retiring in the first four years, over $1,000,000 in bonds and preferred stock. This, too, is a throwback on his life-long ability to balance budgets, save money and, at the same time, give quality service.

He has continuously fought the "New Deal" as contrary to some of the things he found to be fundamental American principles: You pay your debts; you don't spend more than you earn; you make no promises you cannot keep; you keep the promises you make, and you tell the truth unsparringly about things as they are.

Illinois Republicans agree with Knox and believe in him. They think he is the type best suited to present day needs—a business man with a statesman's viewpoint and experience; a fresh, up-to-date "public citizen" fully qualified to apply the homely virtues and fundamentals to modern conditions.

LIVE THE LIFE

Your Christian is like a beggar-girl wed to a king. She is his bride; a name and a place all in an instant and proved up as the years come and go!

Wed to Christ, you ask? Yes—So says the Word. We are the bride. Christ died for the vast company who would become His, that He might present them to Himself, a glorious Bride. We do not struggle to get Him. He died to get us. You are His; He is yours. And having Him, you have all—for in Him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily and we are complete in Him. In Him all peace, wisdom, truth, cheer, fearlessness, joy, love. Possess your possessions. Make it come true.

Here is new life for the discontented, worrying, restless, fruitless, anxious, world-loving, child of God. How make it come true?

First—Absolute surrender. A clean sell-out to God of all the days of your life that remain; all your talents, hopes, abilities, even your pet sins confessed and turned over to Him; your fears and worries too. You stand stripped; nothing left in this world that you can call your own.

Second—Step out into the new hour. From this time on, that you plan or do is for the glory of God. He now has you and the right of way in your life. Step out and count utterly on Christ for the power. Look away from self; look only to Him. It is no longer you that live but Christ that liveth in you. And the life that you live from now on, you live by the faithfulness of the Son of God who loved you and gave Himself to die for you.

He that hath begun a good work in you will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ.

Geo. N. Taylor, Beaverton, Oregon.—Paid adv.

COMMITTEE FAVORS GROWTH OF ALFALFA

This can be put on any time up to almost the time the alfalfa is seeded. When it is put on late in the season, the crop will, of course, receive no benefit from it the first year, but since the alfalfa does nothing much more than get started the first year, this will not matter particularly. Seeding the alfalfa and then liming it afterwards has not proven very effective in sweetening the soil. The lime should be worked in, which means it should be put on after the ground is plowed. If the alfalfa is to get a good start, it is essential that the ground be in good shape to hold moisture and this means that it must be finely pulverized and well-packed. This can be done on spring plowing, but fall or winter plowing in preparation for planting alfalfa has proven more satisfactory. From time to time various fields of alfalfa in Washington better growth the first year where given a more vigorous start on the fall-plowed ground.

That there are differences in the strains of alfalfa seed has been very clearly demonstrated in demonstration plantings on several places in the county using several strains in each planting. Growers have inquired from time to time about Ladak alfalfa for the Willamette valley. This is a variety that has done fine in eastern Oregon, but under Willamette valley county have been planted where part of the plantings would be on fall-plowed ground and another part of it on early spring or even late winter-plowed ground all in the same field. Almost without exception the alfalfa will make the conditions it generally does not prove quite as satisfactory as the Grimm variety. It seems to be more or less of a one-crop strain. That is, its first crop is the heavy one and it doesn't come back quite as well as the Grimm does under the same conditions. For Washington county conditions growers can do well to plant nothing but a certified strain of the Grimm variety.

Gophers ruin many an alfalfa stand. These can be effectively controlled through a consistent use of poison bait, made up by using powdered strychnine on green red clover tips or during the winter season by using carrots or parsnips as bait.
