Confident of Victory in November

Topeka, Kan.—"Win with Landon and Knox!" is the G. O. P. battle cry today, and from the appearance of the two Republican nominees, pictured on the steps of the Kansas capitol, it is easy to see that that is just what they intend to do. Gov. Alf M. Landon (left), presidential nominee, and Col. Frank Knox, nominated for vice president, are shown as they exchanged pleasantries and ideas preparatory to beginning their campaign.

ELECTRIC FENCING FOUND ECONOMICAL.

Use of electricity holds considerable possibility in reducing fencing costs on the farm, believes Ivan Branton, assistant agricultural engineer at Oregon State college, who has investigated various kinds of electric fencing. When properly installed, Branton says, electric fencing is entirely safe for stock as well as human beings and lends itself particularly to pasture rotation use.

The advantage of electric fencing is that only one wire is needed and posts may be merely stakes driven in the ground three or four rods apart. Once cattle have been trained by contact with the slightly charged wire, they will leave it entirely alone. It has been found advantageous to string up a wire in the field where it is in regular use.

It is important, says Branton, to obtain equipment that is approved by the state electrical inspector and then install it strictly according to the directions of the manufacturer. It is not practical to try to connect electricity to ordinary fencing nor to connect any fence wire to an electric circuit without specific equipment designed for that purpose.

The single barbed wire ordinarily used for electric fencing is strung on insulators. Wood posts will not conduct the current from the wire when dry but during rainy weather they are likely to destroy its effectiveness. The operating cost of an electric fence is only a few cents a month when properly installed and, because of its rather temporary construction, may be moved from place to place.
