The SNAPSHOT GUILD STORY TELLING

It's the story-telling picture that carries real human interest appeal.

ALMOST all of us have had the experience of calling on friends who persist in getting out their collection of snapshots and parading them before the eyes of their de- fenseless guests.

Now please bear in mind that I harbor no thoughts of this practice as being a breach of social etiquette. On the contrary, I am for it. But—there are many kinds and classes of snapshots. There are, for instance, the snapshots that are very good as far as exposure, sharpness and com- position are concerned but with prac- tically no human interest appeal. We can class these as record pictures.

Have you ever heard of story-tell- ing snapshots? I'll wager that many of you haven't. For that reason this week's Snapshot Guild will be de- voted to story-telling pictures.

From the cradle to the grave we hear stories—and like them. All through our lives we retain our in- terest in story-illustrations. It is this appeal that takes us to the movies and causes us to look through the pages of daily newspapers and mag- azines for pictures that tell stories of human activities.

When it comes to taking snap- shots, however, so many seem to for- get about story-telling subjects. They pick up their cameras and just shoot. There is a better way to take pictures.

There is a vast difference between a close-up view of a person and a story-telling picture. A close-up—whether head-and-shoulder, three- quarters or full length—is more or less a record picture to show the im- age of the person photographed, but it does not tell a story. You may take a picture of Peggy standing looking at the camera. A fine picture, no doubt, bearing all the earmarks of good photography properly exposed and a good example of composition, but still a record-type snapshot.

Let Peggy be pictured raking the leaves and you have a story-telling human interest snapshot. Today as you're glancing through the news- paper, notice for yourself whether record pictures or story-telling pictures of people doing things interest and please you more.

Before taking a picture give it a little thought and if it is to be a snapshot of an individual, have him doing something and not staring at the camera, simulating a victim of amnesia.

I don't want to seem to lecture but I do want to impress upon you the importance of giving serious thought to your picture taking. If you will keep this story-telling idea foremost in your mind when you take your next pictures, I am sure they will be more interesting to you and your friends.

OZZIE NELSON plans to take a year off except for radio. He'll do his Sunday night program from the coast, but aside from that he is going to vacation. For six or seven years Ozzie has been working constantly without a more than a few days of their time outside the studio with off at any one time. He figures he deserves the rest. His wife, Harriet Hilliard, will sing on the program, too, and will work in the movies. But her part of the show doesn't take as long as Ozzie's to re- hearse.

"Arrowsmith" and "Anna Christie" are two plays on the winter schedule of the Radio Theatre. It would mark the first time that a Eugene O'Neill play has been on the Monday night dramatic hour but Sinclair Lewis, who wrote "Arrowsmith," had his "Dodsworth" done last season.

"We The People" which brings un- usual persons from all walks in life to the microphone, will return to the air over CBS network on Oct. 7. Gabriel Heatter will serve as the host in place of Phil Lord, who was heard on the last series.

During a visit to Honolulu, Maestro B. A. Rolfe discovered that most "native" Hawaiian music is based on New England hymns which were taught to the inhabitants by the first missionaries from this country.

Joe Penner, who made "Do You Wanta Buy a Duck" and "You Nasty Man" household phrases, has de- cided to stimu- late curiosity as well as provoke laughter, on his new series. The only change Joe has made in the cast is a new girl who is billed as "The Mystery Singer."

She never appears in the studio without a mask, and at some tuture date listeners will be invited to select a stage name for the girl.

Almost every time a girl's part in a dramatic sketch turns up, aside from the guest star role, the glamorous Lamour says "Why, I think I can take care of that one."

Out in Hollywood they can't figure out these folks who put on "One Man's Family." The screen players work together on the lot and that's about all. But the players in "One Man's Family" spend a large part of
