POISON OAK

Inflammatory skin conditions due to poison oak are of frequent occurrence particularly in Western Oregon. The vividly colored shiny leaves which have been picked for decorative purposes result in a disagreeable experience when the true nature of the leaf asserts itself. The leaves of poison oak appear in clusters of three. In early spring the plant puts forth dark red leaves which eventually turn to a dark green. When in full growth the leaves are somewhat similar to an oak leaf. The fruit consists of greenish white berries which develop during the summer. In fall the leaves turn to a beautiful golden red. The plant may appear as a vine or grow in the form of a small shrub three or four feet high. The vine may encircle trees and grow many feet away from the ground. Poison oak is usually found in uncultivated ground, in fence corners, and along trails growing with other bushes. In winter the plant sheds its leaves. The bare stem with twigs, tendrils and berries remain. Usually the plant dies down, but contact with any part of the plant may cause poisoning. A person may not actually touch the plant itself, yet he may fall a victim to an attack of poison oak through indirect contact—that is by clothing, tools or other articles which have been contaminated or by smoke carrying the resinous poison to the skin.

While usually not dangerous, poison oak is painful and distressing beyond description. The eruption appears usually first between the fingers as small blisters which upon breaking, spread the rash to other parts of the body. The ankles and the legs may also be affected. In extreme cases the inflammation and swelling may close the eyes and even the mouth. The inflammation may develop in a few hours to one or two days after exposure. It ordinarily subsides in a week or ten days. It is accompanied by intense itching or burning.

Preventive measures are advisable after a trip to the woods or country. All persons who are required to work in districts where poison oak grows should take reasonable precautions. Learn to recognize the plant and avoid coming in contact with it. If your work requires you to handle the plant, protect yourself from poisoning by removing the irritating principle by the free use of soap and water. Use plenty of soap which lathers freely, washing every part of the body. Wash the hair to get out any of the poison which may reach it. After the bath, rinse with rubbing alcohol. This dissolves the poison which should then be rinsed out with water. Change all of the clothing you wore while exposed to poison oak. Each article should be aired and washed. Soap and water promptly and thoroughly applied will act as a preventive of poison oak in most cases.

St. Mary's of the Valley

The Quill and Scroll Chapter gave a lawn party, Monday afternoon. Literary games were played after which refreshments were served. This social event concludes the activities of the organization until next September.

A poem "Maid or Beas" composed by Grace Morrow, sophomore, was published in the latest number of the Current Science. Friday afternoon the primary and intermediate grades gave in honor of their mothers a pleasing program that formed a part of their recent class project on flowers. Each little girl did her best to entertain the appreciative audience.

The pamphlets have purchased a new pamphlet and magazine rack that now occupies a prominent place in the study hall.

Homecoming for the members of the Alumni Association was held Sunday afternoon, May 15. The business session was taken up with the election of officers and the making of plans for the coming year. Margaret Carson was elected president; Mary Orselli, vice president; Helen Riverman, treasurer. A banquet at which the girls of the junior class served followed the reception of the graduates of 1938. The afternoon proved to be most pleasant for the group of friends and former teachers and was declared by those attending to be outstanding in lively interest and sociability.

The SNAPSHOT GUILD

PROPER EXPOSURE

Brilliantly lighted beach subjects, with no harsh shadows, take less exposure. For this, 1/25 at f.16 (or the large lens opening on a box camera). If subject faces sun, or for a "long-shot" beach view, use f.22 or the small lens opening on a box camera).

MANY writers make a great deal about exposure, so that it seems complicated. As a matter of fact, for most ordinary subjects out of doors, it is simple.

Light in very early morning or late afternoon is quite weak, but from an hour or so after sunrise to about an hour before sunset, it is fairly constant in its intensity. During the middle daylight hours, camera loaded with chrome type or "pan" type film, set your lens and shutter as follows:

BRILLIANT DAY

Average subject, 1/25 second and f.11 lens opening.

Open landscape, 1/25, f.16.

Water or beach scenes, 1/25, f.22.

CLOUDY BRIGHT DAY

Average subject, 1/25, f.8.

Open landscape, 1/25, f.11.

Water or beach scenes, 1/25, f.16.

DULL DAY

Average subject, 1/25, f.6.3.

Open landscape, 1/25, f.8.

Water or beach scenes, 1/25, f.8.

When you must use a high shutter speed, use a larger lens opening. Remember that 1/25 second at f.11 is the same as 1/50 at f.8, and about the same as 1/100 at f.6.3 or 1/200 at f.4.5.

Follow these exposures this spring and summer, and you won't go wrong. If you use a box camera, take snapshots on bright days only. On a dull day, place the box camera on a firm support and give a very short time exposure (one-half to one second, or about as fast as you can work the shutter when on "Time") using the small lens opening.

With any camera, when you are taking pictures shortly after sunrise or before sunset, you must use a larger lens opening, or a slower shutter speed. At such times, light tends to be yellow and the "pan" type film will be best as it is definitely faster in such light.

Your Congressman

James W. MOTT
(REPUBLICAN)

Congressman Mott is one of the recognized leaders of the National House of Representatives.

The following excerpts from the Congressional Record show what his colleagues think of him:

"Your outstanding work on behalf of your District and the fine ability that you have demonstrated in the field of national legislation have won for you the confidence and respect, not only of your own party, but of the general membership of the House of Representatives."

—Congressman Harry L. Engbright, Republican Whip, on the appointment of Congressman Mott to membership on the Republican Floor Organization of the House.

"The gentleman from Oregon (Mr. Mott) is one of the leaders of his party here in the House and one of its spokesmen."

—Congressman Thomas I. Blanton, Democratic Leader, in the debate on the Social Security Bill.

"I want to say to the House that there is not a more able, a more active or a more effective member than the distinguished member from Oregon, Mr. Mott."

—Congressman Wilburn Cartwright, Chairman of the Committee on Roads, in the debate on the 1938 Road Bill.
