Shark Fishing a New West Coast Sport

THE spunky trout of the Laurentians and the Canadian Rockies, the scrappy bass of Northern Ontario, the huge maskinonge at French River have all been put on their mettle by a fighting fish new to sportsmen—the shark.

Basking sharks have been found in large numbers on the east coast of Vancouver Island. While they seem harmless to swimmers, they are a terror on the end of 500 yards of 50-pound test line.

Many fishermen have tried shark fishing with great success. A Victoria man, McGinty Matterson, caught the first shark, a 596-pounder. The record so far is a 987 pounder landed by Commander May of California.

Equipment is simple and not too expensive and the sport is worthy of the most skillful angler's talent.

When the shark first takes the bait, a salmon of from six to eight pounds, the fisherman thinks he has hooked bottom. Then the fun starts.

With mad rushes and plunges he churns the water into foam. He has a nasty habit of turning on the boat and snapping at the line or rolling on it and severing it with his file-like skin. You never know what he will do next. About the time you think your back will break or your arms be torn out, you work the fish closer to the boat. It is suicidal to try to land such a fish, so it is customary to polish him off with a 30-30 rifle.

It is a grand sport and a new one, judging by enquiries received by the Canadian Pacific tourist department at Montreal, and at the Empress Hotel, Victoria, B. C., centre of shark fishing activities. Many American and Canadian sportsmen are expected to unite in a war on sharks, from July to September, the time of the year when they appear most plentiful.

rigidly enforced," Morgan said. "The purpose of the law is to protect the dairying industry, careful in noting test results for one cow with the disease, can spread it through an entire herd. Cow sellers and buyers throughout the county should be careful in noting test results before selling or buying cows." Cows which react to the test are

Lamp Survives Blast; Still Burns

UNIQUE in lighting history is the recent experience of the lamp at right in the illustration. In use by an Oklahoma City ice cream plant, the lamp was burning brightly in its drop-cord fixture when a fire broke out. During the blaze, an ammonia tank exploded, crashed through the wall of the building, tore through an empty barn on the opposite side of the alley then burst through the kitchen of a house on the next street.

When the smoke and fumes cleared away, there was the lamp, which had been directly in the path of the explosion, still burning, although the combined heat and pressure had softened and distorted the bulb to its present odd shape. The lamp, which continues to function, is being preserved in a collection of lighting curios in the General Electric Institute at No. 2 Park, Cleveland, Ohio.

RIGHT OUT OF THE AIR

By R. F. SERVICE

The original cast of "Pepper Young's Family," NBC-Red network serial, has never been changed since the inception of the series. There have been occasional additions but the starting members have been permanent players.

With Mary Margaret McBride, CBS' columnist of the Air, recently received the University of Missouri medal of honor for distinguished service in journalism, she was the first woman so honored in University history, as well as the only person in the field of radio to be singled out.

Beautiful Nadine Conner, above, young California soprano, came east for a guest star appearance on "The Song Shop" heard over CBS and was so successful that she was made the regular star of the series. Her radio work made the film moguls perk up ears and they sent for Nadine to make a hurried trip to Hollywood where she was screened for the leading role in "The Desert Song." She gets the film job whenever microphone chores permit her absence.

Frank Black, conductor of the Friday night NBC concert series, is the man credited with taking harmony groups out of the "Sweet Adeline" class. When he met the Revelers' male quartet, in 1924, he departed from tradition and chose "Dinah" as the song to promote his new idea for harmony singing.

Irving Caesar, above, the "Songs of Safety" man on Rudy Vallee's Hour, has the lyrics for such song hits as "Tea For Two," "Is It True What They Say About Dixie?" and "Swanee" to his credit, yet he plays the piano with two fingers—one in each hand. His "Safety Songs" are getting a big reception from both parents and children all over the country.

Raymond Paige will be kept busy for the summer despite the fact that "Hollywood Hotel" fades for the war weather. Paige will make one of his rare eastern trips to fulfill concert engagements with his noted orchestra.

No wonder Bob Burns, famous comedian, smiles as he holds his new daughter, Barbara Ann. This is one of the first pictures taken of the Thursday night humorist and his infant daughter.

When Lum and Abner first decided upon their characters, it was planned to make Abner a bald-headed man. Norris Goff, who plays Abner, rebelled when he remembered that he would have to shave his head for vaudeville dates and newspaper pictures.

Betty Garde, above, one of radio's foremost actresses, is heard in stellar as well as supporting roles on the Thursday night Kate Smith Hour over the CBS network.

Solo, "Bre'r Rabbit," "Spring Song," "Song of the Happy Blacksmith," Bonnie Le Rud.

Solo, "Rondo," "The Clowns," Mary Lee Dunlevy.

Solo, "Surf Riding," "A Polish Dream," Lorraine Denney.

Solo, "School is Out," "Anvil Chorus," "Doll's Wedding March," Molly Bergin.

Solo, "May Day," "Curious Story," Louise Heughen.

Bible Class and Sunday School songs were played by Alice Jean Smith, Bonnie Le Rud, Lorraine Denney, Helen Randall, Molly Bergin and Louise Heughen all singing.

WARNING ABOUT DISEASED CATTLE

Sale of diseased cattle drew a warning this week from District Attorney G. Russell Morgan with the appearance of a case in the Tigard district.

Ralph Belknap, Tigard farmer was fined $50 for selling an abortion-test-reacting cow recently to J. P. Heintz another Tigard resident. Heintz had the cow tested for Bang's disease after the purchase and found the cow to be a reactor. Investigation disclosed that the same cow had given a similar reaction about a year ago. Under the law, when a cow reacts to the test it can be sold only for slaughter and not for dairy purposes. The fine was made out by Judge J. S. Barber of Tigard Justice Court.

"Penalties for violation of the law are heavy and will be very
