THE THIRD RAIL

For a matter of thirty years plus this scribe has been an avid student of editorial pages. Our passion for the neatly turned phrase, the pat quip, the intricacies of expositional clarity, dates back to the days when the editorial pages were of high importance—back to the old Chicago Record, in fact. Thirty years ago there were many excellent editorial pages — The Louisville Courier-Journal, the Sioux City (Iowa) Journal, the Kansas City Star—to mention but a few. There is today, in Oregon, an editorial page up to the standard of yesteryear—that of the Portland Oregonian. If this writer were to name his choice of the great editorial pages the Oregonian's would be in a leading place as a piece of excellent workmanship. Editorials need not be of a political nature; in fact, the really good and interesting editorials rarely have to do with politics. The political editorial is certain to offend a secton of any publication's readership. Neither need an editorial be humorous—but many of the best have an element of humor. The following, from last Sunday's Oregonian—is in our opinion a fine example of editorial craftsmanship, whimsical but entertaning:

"It has always seemed to many of us that the distinguished name of Raymond Lee Ditmars, curator of mammals and reptiles of the New York Zoological park, was the ultimate certificaion of scientific integrity. Whether it walked or crawled, crept, flopped flew or swam, a creature confided to the zealous care of the excellent Dr. Ditmars was as safe and secure, we fondly fancied—perhaps safer—than in or on its native jungle, pampas, crag, lagoon, estuary, swampland or high sierra. One has imagined Dr. Ditmars to be as solicitous for the creature comfort of any of his curious charges, as instant in the defense of the least of them, as the tigress for her cubs. But much of life is disillusion, is it not?

The magazine Time reports that recently, returning from the tropical island of Trinidad with a choicely rare collection of snakes and batrachians, Dr. Ditmars felicitated himself on the acquisition of a round dozen of large golden-hued frogs, the like of which may be found on Trinidad. And eye they sailed, the good doctor and his Trinidadian fauna, rollicking home to New York, and as the voyage progressed Dr. Ditmars was frequently seen to be poking around the cartons, cases and cages which contained that very valuable cargo—but it might have been observed that he lingered longest over the golden frogs. It befell that when his colleagues met him at the end of the voyage, and eagerly inquired about the glamorous frogs of Trinidad, there was a moment of embarassing silence, and the the doctor confessed that the appeal of the frogs had proved too much for him on the way home. He had eaten them all.

The New York Zoological park will not exhibit sundry golden frogs of Trinidad, and the reflection is peculiarly saddening. Man at his strongest is but a froil vessel, and prone to error as the sparks fly upward. The frogs, auriferous and wonderful, are gone beyond recall. But yet one discovers not without gladness a certain kinshop in the unscientific behavior of the penitent Dr. Ditmars. When he decided that the nether limbs of the prized specimens would brown nicely in butter, and yielded to temptation he was no longer the austere servitor of science. Yes, sir, Doc—right then you were warmly reprehensibly human and a better scientist, no doubt, for that."

Back in Iowa they told us that the rainy winters of Oregon would fill us with dank melancholly and depress us with blue jitters of viru'ent indigo hue. Mebbe they will—some day. Up to date, however, we'll take the rain in preference to 7 months of snow and temperatures ranging down to forty below zero. Which is not to imply that Iowa is not a most excellent state—ahead of any we've ever lived in in a variety of ways.

Deanna Durbin Gives Her Formula For a Pleasant "Afternoon Off"

The swimming pool in Deanna Durbin's front yard is a popular place when Hollywood's youngest songbird—she is just fifteen years old—is not busy on the set of her forthcoming picture, "That Certain Age." And nine times out of ten on these "afternoons off" a pantry raid is conducted for cookies and milk after the swimming is over.

MOTHERS with teen-age youngsters and consequently a cookie jar that needs constant replenishing will welcome this favorite recipe of Deanna and her pals. It is the Durbin family cook's specialty which she has appropriately called "health cookies."

Here is the recipe:

Health Cookies

1½ cups cooked pitted prunes
⅔ cup sugar
1 tablespoon grated orange rind
2½ tablespoons lemon juice
1 cup shortening
1 cup brown sugar
3½ cups flour
2 teaspoons baking powder
¼ teaspoon salt
½ cup of water
2 cups all-rye flakes

Cook prunes, sugar and orange rind together until thick. Add lemon juice. Cool.

Cream shortening, add sugar and beat thoroughly. Sift flour, baking powder and salt together and add alternately with water to first mixture. Stir in coarsely rolled all-rye flakes. Roll dough to about one-eighth inch in thickness and cut with floured cookie cutter.

Spread one round with prune filling and put a second round on top, pressing edges together. Bake on a greased baking sheet in moderately hot oven (425 degrees F.) about 12 minutes. Yield: Three dozen cookies, two and a half inches in diameter
