ELECTRIC SERVICE WITH SAFETY

Care of Electrical Appliances.

This is one of a series of articles prepared by the International Association of Electrical Inspectors to encourage safety in the use of electricity in homes.

Electric heating pads are very helpful appliances, and can be used with safety if a few rules are observed. Some pads have safety rules permanently attached to them and careful attention should be given to these suggestions so that fire and accident hazards may be avoided.

To assure a long life for heating pads, avoid so far as practicable, sharp folds. Pads should not be pulled from place to place by means of the supply cord lest the wire connections be broken. Do not hang the pad on a hook in a closet by means of the cord. Keep the original container to protect the pad when it is not in use. The practice of sticking safety pins through a pad to hold it in place should be avoided because pins are likely to make contact with the heating element. This would make the pin "alive" which might constitute a shock hazard. It is important to see that fabric covered pads are always kept dry. Infants, invalids or sleeping persons using heating pads should be attended.

The precaution regarding keeping heating pads dry applies to all appliances so far as the heating elements are concerned. When the electrical insulation of an appliance becomes wet, its effectiveness is greatly reduced because water is a conductor of electricity. It is evident that appliances should not be immersed in water so that their electrical parts become soaked.

Parents should inspect electrical toys for insulation weaknesses.

When it is necessary to wash appliances, make sure that they are disconnected from the circuit, and take care to keep the electrical parts dry.

Electrical toys, like all other electrical devices, are safe if they are well made and kept in good condition but it is evident that the same careful treatment must be exercised with these devices intended for connection to the house circuit as with the regular household appliances. Parents should subject electrical toys to a careful inspection from time to time to see that they are in good order. Attention should be given to the condition of the cords, particularly if these are of a substandard variety and do not carry the Underwriters' label.

There is one precaution to be observed in lighting Christmas trees with electric lamps. If the molded insulating material, of which the small lamp sockets are made, does not extend far enough beyond the end of the metal screw-shells, the screw-shells themselves or the metal bases of the lamps may be exposed. If metallic tinsel or other metallic decorations come into contact with these exposed "live" parts of two sockets at the same time, a short circuit may result. This kind of an accident cannot happen with a lighting set having sockets properly designed. Before buying a Christmas tree set, screw a lamp into one socket and observe whether hanging tinsel could make contact with live parts of the socket or lamp. If metal reflectors are used see that the metal foil of the reflectors is well insulated from the metal of the socket and lamp base.

Electric lamps for Christmas trees have largely eliminated a very serious fire hazard, that of decorating trees with lighted candles. For this reason their use should be encouraged.

If Christmas tree lamps do not fit well in sockets it may be possible for tinsel or other metal decorations to make contact between two sockets and cause a short circuit.

World's Poultry Congress Comes to the U. S. A. for the First Time

The World's Poultry Congress which meets every third year comes to Cleveland, Ohio, July 28 to August 7, 1939. This is the first meeting ever held in the United States and probably those active in the poultry industry will all be gone before it comes back again. About 60 nations usually participate in the Congress. Every operation in the industry from nest to table will be shown. Every known breed of fowl will be on display. Scientists from all parts of the world will participate. Over 20 acres under roof will be utilized to house the exhibits. The building upper left in the above picture is the Hall of Youth for the junior activities. Also is shown the Cleveland Public Auditorium, exterior and interior, where many meetings will be held and where part of the exhibit will be housed. The two visitors shown are a Polish fowl and a Japanese long tailed chicken. A membership costing only $1.00 entitles the visitor to attend eleven days of this Congress. These memberships must be bought in advance.
