WHO WROTE IT?

"Chinatown, My Chinatown"

ALTHOUGH he was born in Budapest, and spent most of his life in America, he wrote, strangely enough, many Irish songs, such as "Bedelia," "My Irish Molly-O" and "Mr. Dooley." "Chinatown, My Chinatown" was more in his genre, since he spent the early years of his life on the lower east side of New York, not far from "Dreamy Chinatown where the lights are low."

He went to school at night, working during the day to help support the family. He acquired the neighborhood for pianos on which to practice. He worked as an office boy in a cigar factory, as a book-keeper's clerk; he was cashier in a Turkish bath, an errand boy in a department store. He never lost his desire to compose.

He landed a job with a publishing firm finally, at half the salary he was then earning. While there he met the late William Jerome, and they formed a songwriting team. It was not until three years after they had written "Chinatown, My Chinatown" for a legitimate production that the song was made famous by the vaudeville team of Mathews and Ashley.

He has been a songwriter for forty years. He is a prominent member of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, and resides at present in Hollywood where he is composing new tunes for radio and pictures.
