THE LAST STEP

A short-sighted gentleman went to choose a pair of spectacles. "These glasses," he said, "are not strong enough for me."
"But, sir, they are No. 2."
"What is next to No. 2?"
"No. 1."
"And after that?"
"After No. 1, sir, you will want a dog."

DANNY SAVES LITTLE MISS NANNY

To do a brave deed for yourself is much to be commended; but when you're brave for someone else, why, then the deed is splendid.

DANNY and little Miss Nanny Meadow Mouse were having just the best time ever. You see, they really were very much in love with each other. Danny thought little Miss Nanny the most beautiful Meadow Mouse in all the great world. Hadn't she seen him fight a splendid battle just for her? And hadn't he brought her the very nicest things to eat? What more could she ask of anyone? And so they had a perfectly happy time together in the sunshine on the Green Meadows, and quite forgot everything and everybody but themselves.

Now, it never does to forget. No, sir, it never does to forget. Forgetting is what brings most of the trouble to the little people of the Green Meadows and the Green Forest. No matter how busy or how happy they are or how peaceful everything seems, they must never, never forget to watch out for danger. But most of them are very much like little boys and girls and some older people—they do forget, particularly when they are having a good time. Old Mr. Trouble always seems to be looking especially for those who are having a good time, probably because he knows that that is the time when they are most likely to have forgotten and so are not watching out.

"M-m-m!" said Reddy to himself, "I smell Meadow Mouse."

That is the way it was with Danny and Nanny Meadow Mouse. It was so very beautiful and they were so happy and having such a good time that it didn't seem possible that danger could be anywhere near. But it was. Something had put it into the head of a certain gentleman in red to go over to that part of the Green Meadows where little Miss Nanny made her home. It was Reddy Fox. He had no particular business over there. He was just out for a walk. But Reddy Fox never goes out for a walk without keeping ears and eyes and nose wide open for anything which may prove interesting or important. This time it was his nose, that wonderful little black nose, that warned him that there was something worth looking into here.

"M-m-m," said Reddy to himself, "I smell Meadow Mouse, and it reminds me that I am hungry. A fat Meadow Mouse is just what I need. I must look into this."

Right away Reddy began to follow that little, black nose, and it led him along one of the private little paths of little Miss Nanny. He stepped very softly, and every few steps he stood up a little on his hind legs to look ahead over the tops of the grasses to see if he could see any of them moving where a careless Meadow Mouse was running. And every few steps he stopped and listened for the sound of scurrying little feet. So, little by little following that wonderful little, black nose of his, he drew nearer to the place where Danny and Nanny Meadow Mouse were having such a good time and were so forgetful. At last as he raised himself to look he saw little Miss Nanny run under a little bunch of overhanging grass. Reddy smiled, and it was a cruel, hungry smile. Then he stole forward a few steps and settled himself to spring swiftly into the middle of that little bunch of overhanging grass.

It was just that very instant that Danny Meadow Mouse happened to see Reddy Fox. He knew just what was going to happen, and it made his little heart almost stop beating. Then what do you think he did? It was just the bravest thing! He ran right across in front of Reddy and squeaked a sharp warning to little Miss Nanny. Did you ever know of a braver act than that?
