HOME ELECTRIFICATION

GAINING IN PORTLAND AREA
The idea of complete home electrification is gaining marked favor among builders and purchasers of new residences in the area served by Portland General Electric company, according to findings of the utility in a check-up it has made on new homes constructed during the last six months of 1938. The survey covered approximately 500 new residences connected to the utility's lines, and listed installation of ranges, water heaters, refrigerators and furnace equipment.

Electric ranges enjoyed a 64 per cent preference with 317 units installed in a total of 415 homes.

The utility's analysis indicated a rapidly growing acceptance of automatic water heating service, which was installed in 21 or 51 per cent, of 429 homes in which definite provision for heating water had been made at the time of completion. Of these automatic installations 134, or 61 per cent, were electric.

Refrigeration gave electricity its biggest lead. Electric refrigerators were an 85 per cent choice, with 348 installations out of 411.

Fifty-one percent of the new homes checked had automatic furnaces installed. In nearly all such installations electricity is made use of for energizing blower motors, fans and thermostatic controls.
