ATTENTION CALLED

Earl Saelt, secretary of state, calls attention to the following item from the publication "The Safe Driver."

"Some time ago the National Transportation Company of New York City installed a rear buzzer signal on every vehicle in its taxicab fleet.

"Officials hoped the buzzer would prevent backing up accidents, which had become far too numerous. It did. The buzzer attracted attention when the cabs backed up.

"Backing up accidents dropped 30 per cent.

"Because a backing vehicle usually travels slowly, drivers are apt to minimize the hazards of traveling in reverse.

"Evanston, Illinois, had a splendid record of 301 day without a traffic fatality. It was broken late in 1938 when a woman was killed by a truck backing into a private driveway.

"In New York state last September eight men were struck and killed by automobiles in industrial accidents, four of which were being backed up.

"It is so easy to get into trouble when you're backing up. The victim often is unaware of the vehicle or becomes caught between it and a wall or loading platform."
