Activities To Shift At Local Cannery

Work Is To Begin On Cane Berries In Coming Week

RAINS ADD LENGTH TO STRAWBERRY SEASON

Activities at the R. I. MacLaughlin cannery are expected to shift in the coming week to the cane berries, which include the boysen berry, raspberry and loganberry. The recent rains have added to the length of the strawberry crop now occupying the cannery's time. An average of one hundred and fifty barrels of strawberries a day have been sent to Portland for the completing processes, and the crop has been sufficiently large to provide employment for a force of about fifty-five.

The remaining portion of the strawberry season will be spent in filling the small pack carton. Most of this carton container stock is purchased from companies in the east and has this year been late in arriving. Some idea of the vast quantities turned out by the cannery may be gleaned from the following interesting item from the records of the plant. During the height of the strawberry activities an average of three hundred to four hundred bags of sugar, of one hundred pound capacity were used each day.

The R. I. MacLaughlin Company expresses itself as being very well pleased by the reception it has received from Beaverton people. A gratifyingly large number of growers have been contacted to supply berries. As yet few new plantings have been undertaken. This form of activity will come during the next few years, it is believed. As farmers become more conscious of the presence of a local market, now idle fields will be planted for the producing of crops.

SORRENTO WATER VOTE SET AGAIN

July 21 was set by the county court in Hillsboro Wednesday as the date for the second Sorrento Water District election. Petitions filed with the county clerk last week were checked and found to contain 87 valid signatures, representing 25 per cent of the legal voters within the proposed district.

County Clerk W. A. Tupper declared following the court action that he will select and announce a polling place and a corps of election officials within the next few days. In addition to voting on the water district, the Sorrento ballots will elect five commissioners to execute the water district's business.

A previous election on Dec. 29 seeking organization of virtually the same district, resulted in a 56 to 50 approval vote but the county court nullified the vote in favor of objectors who appeared at a public hearing.

Lauren Gillfillan wrote "I Went to Pit College" as a result of her experiences in a mining town in Pennsylvania. After graduating from Smith college, Lauren Gillfillan tried for two months to find a job in New York City, but was unsuccessful. In the mining town she lived with the miners, went into the mines disguised as a young boy, attended their meetings and participated in every phase of their life. She knew what it was to be hungry, ragged and dirty.

This book which is in the Community Library is as entertaining as any book of fiction.

YOUTHFUL SPECTATOR AT FESTIVALS

A wide-eyed spectator at the recent festivals was young Billy Edward Walker, son of Mr. and Mrs. James Walker of Beaverton. Not five months old until June 24, the little lad is surprisingly advanced.

He crawls and has sat alone for weeks. When asked to ride his bicycle, the little fellow pumps his legs energetically, obeying this suggestion when only three and one half months old, and when it was spoken from behind him and across the room.

Billy answers the slightest friendly overture with a wide companionable grin. Having a neat head of boyish hair, his proudest record is the receiving of four haircuts in the barber's chair before the passing of his fourth month.

The building is fifty feet by ninety feet. It will be two-stories high, having a large lodge room upstairs and a dining room and kitchen downstairs. The dining room will also serve as a dance hall. Heat will be supplied through an oil burning furnace.

The front exterior is being finished in brick veneer, and shakes are to be used upon the sides and rear. It is planned to later continue the brick veneer to include the entire surface.

Plans for the building were drawn by Thayne Logan, of the firm of Barret and Logan, Architects. The corner stone is to be laid about the latter part of July.
