tion there has been a general reduction in the cost of borrowed money.

There is a possibility of the Willamette valley being included in the sugar beet acreage when the present sugar quota expires and a new allotment is permitted. The large sugar refining company, located at Nyssa, is interested in the proposition and has been corresponding on the subject. Domestic production is now under rigid control by the department of agriculture, the control extending down to the point of designating wages for pickers.

Efforts to develop the ship-building industry on the Columbia river and Puget sound have received little encouragement from the Federal Maritime commission and it has awarded contracts for five cargo carriers to be constructed in Southern California. Every proposal suggested for the establishing of yards north of San Francisco bay has been discouraged by the commission and where there are no facilities the commission declines to award bids.

One of the essentials in war is tin. The administration favors exploring the United States in the hope of developing a supply. Government officials say traces have been found in Washington, Idaho, Nevada and California—all around Oregon, but no trace in Oregon.

Politics played a large part in the recent congress, but when something affected the country and was not tinged with politics, White House and Congress were as united as Siamese Twins—the two billion dollars voted for national defense, as an instance.

Although congress has adjourned, one man's job continues. He is the chap whose duty it is to see that all the clocks in the capitol, senate and house office buildings keep running and also keep time even though no one sees them but the janitors and charwomen.

George Angelos Raises Large Acreage Celery

One of Beaverton's more picturesque crops is fast developing to maturity under the warm summer sun. Eight acres of celery greens are pushing steadily upward to eventually form a spread of light green foliage. Planted in the low-lying land at the edge of town, the celery makes a pretty sight when viewed from the heights of the roadway.

The celery is growing upon the acreage of George Angelos, on Canyon road at the eastern city limits. He has under cultivation the golden bloom variety, which is noted for its white stalk. He reports that the stand this year is very good.

At the present time Mr. Angelos is employing three men and when the crop is ready for market, his crew will number eight or nine, all of whom will be local men.

A portion of the celery is usually shipped to the inland states, having been sent as far east as Montana. It is believed that a part of the crop will be so handled this year.

However, the largest portion is sold to customers of the home and nearby communities. Mr. Angelos places a large quantity of celery upon the Portland market and also supplies local stores, markets and stands with a share of his succulent delicacy.
