Washing and Pressing of Summer Slacks Made Easy

Here is How to Launder Them When They Have Slide Fasteners.

Gone are the days when the men folk were willing to slouch around in disreputably soiled and unpressed wash slacks. Today's man is clothes conscious even in his lounge and sports outfits.

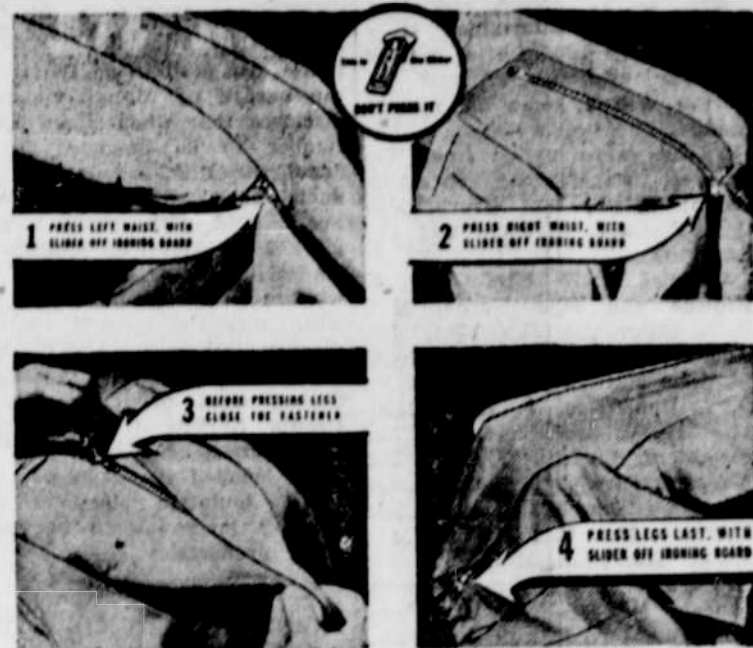

Any wife and mother likes to see Dad and Junior looking neat and spruce—but what a terrific problem comes up when one considers the necessity of keeping them that way.

The problem magnifies when we are told by statisticians that today ten times as many wash slacks are being worn by the nation's males as five years ago. Another survey—conducted by a large soap manufacturer—brings to light the fact that in eight out of ten cases laundering is done in the home, despite the existence of some 7,000 commercial laundries in the country.

One happy thought, for those whose men wear wash slacks fitted with slide fasteners, is that the old task of replacing buttons vanishes. It is said that more than half this year's output will be so made.

Always in washing slacks avoid boiling water—a temperature up to 140 degrees is good. Suds should be made from a proven, mild but effective soap, a number of which are on the market. Soaking for a half hour or longer before washing helps to loosen the dirt and makes washing easier.

When you wash slide fastened slacks always close the fastener so that the little couplers will be meshed, and therefore cannot be damaged in your washing machine. Also there will be no chance for the fabric of other garments in the wash to tangle in an open fastener.

In wringing, make sure that the wringer rolls are adjusted as loosely as possible so that the slider or movable part which opens and closes the slide fastener will not be crushed or damaged.

When you reach the pressing stage the slacks should be lightly starched and pressed damp rather than wet. Your iron should be hot.

Tackle the pockets first. Iron them inside out and iron until dry, then replace them to their normal position. Next press the waist of the slacks by beginning on the front over the right end of your ironing board, as shown in the illustration.

Continue ironing in straight strokes with the thread of the fabric until each section is dry. Bring the garment towards you over the ironing board as you finish each section.

When the slacks have a slide fastener—press the waist sections on the right end of the ironing board with the fastener open all of the way so that the slider is off the board entirely. Although no harm will be done if you press on the couplers of the fastener, never press on the slider. When you finish the waist, close the fastener completely and start on the legs.

By placing the inseam over the outseam and pressing from the inseam side, you are assured of getting the leg creases in the right place. Of course, you press only one leg at a time and the experts tell us that it is wise to press the cuff thoroughly first before pressing the rest of the leg.

Flavor lurks in every single glass jar of prepared horseradish. Lifts up sauces and salad dressings, purks up meat dishes, good in cooked salad dressing and sour cream dressing and lives happily with cucumbers. Boiled beef cries for it.

Stuffed eggs will be with us as long as picnickers survive. Any hen would be proud of her output if after hardcooking, the yolks are mixed with smoked Norwegian sardines, mayonnaise Worcestershire and seasonings—the whole blended and put right back into the shells.

Cabbage-Nut-Fruit Salad

(Serve in whole cabbage shell) Remove outside leaves of red cabbage. Cut off top. With sharp knife, cut out center, leaving outside as a "shell." Chop the center cabbage fine, crisp, and drain. Mix with pineapple tidbits, chopped Brazil nuts, chopped red-skinned apple (unpeeled) and a few raisins. Mix with French dressing. To serve pile salad mixture back into cabbage

"shell." Mayonnaise may be passed.

Weiners Get Crowned

Ever since "hot dogs" have been judged fit for a king, the weiner has been climbing the social ladder, and now emerges as a Crown Roast, a juicy affair with a stuffing.

24 weiners or 12 shirt fat weiners
Bran stuffing

Arrange weiners in verticle position around side of 8-inch casserole. Put stuffing into the casserole, pressing weiners will into the dressing, forming a crown roast effect. Bake in moderate oven (375 F) about 25 minutes. Eight servings.

Bran Stuffing

12 cups ¼-inch bread cubes
1 cup all-bran
3 tbsps. minced onion
½ cup melted at
¼ teas. sage
¼ teas. pepper
¼ teas. poultry seasoning
1½ cups stock or water
Combine bread cubes with all-bran. Sauté onion in fat and add to bread. Add seasonings and stock. Mix well.
