Beaverton Is Darkhorse Catholic Tournament

Darkhorse of the sixth annual Oregon Catholic high school basketball tournament, set for Friday, Saturday and Sunday at University of Portland, looks to be St. Mary's of Beaverton, the team which lost to Columbia Preps of Portland in the finals of the 1939 event.

The Beaverton lads have won eight out of 14 games this season, including two triumphs over St. John's of Milwaukie and on their star of the Sea of Astoria, both of which will take part in the tourney.

They were defeated, however by another tourney entry, Mount Angel Preps.

Don Kingsley is the leading scorer of the club with 155 points in 11 games. Bill Sausser has 92 points in 14 games.

By an odd coincidence, Beaverton will open its 1940 tournament play right where it left off last year. The Gaels will meet Columbia Prep school's defending champions at 10 p. m. Friday in the final game of the opening round.

Sacred Heart of Salem has won three and lost four, and St. John's of Milwaukie, the "baby" of the tournament, has won one and lost three.

Other entrants, besides those mentioned, are St. Mary's of Eugene, St. Stephen's of Portland and St. Mary's of The Dalles. Friday night's opening round will match Salem and St. Stephen's at 7:00 p. m., The Dalles and Eugene at 8 p. m., Mount Angel and Astoria at 9 p. m., and Beaverton and Columbia at 10 p. m.

Large Trout Egg Take At Alsea

Approximately 1,219,345 eggs have been taken to date by the state game department from less than 20,000 adult native searun cutthroat trout held at Alsea trout hatchery. This supply of brood trout, the only one of its kind in Oregon, has been developed through careful selection and was recently reported by Dr. Fred J. Foster, regional director of the U. S. Bureau of Fisheries, to be the largest and finest stock of adult native cutthroat trout in existence.

The commission plans to rear cutthroat brood trout at Alsea hatchery for the purpose of stocking Eel lake in Douglas and Coos counties, which is being acquired for development as a cutthroat brood lake and from which it is hoped that it will eventually be possible to secure enough eggs to supply the needs of the coast hatcheries.

Of the 16 pedestrian fatalities, nine, or 56 percent occurred in urban areas while of the seven rural fatalities, six were on heavily traveled roads and one on lightly traveled highways. Crossing highways accounted for four of the seven rural pedestrian deaths while two persons were killed while walking along a highway and one met death while working on a car on the road.

Sixty-five percent of the traffic fatalities during January of 1939 were pedestrians. Motorists and pedestrians are urged to exercise care in walking and driving so as to avoid a repetition of this toll this January.

Of the 20 persons killed in traffic accidents a year ago, 13 were pedestrians. Four of these deaths were on rural highways and the rest were in cities with Portland alone accounting for six. Of the seven persons killed in other types of accidents, two died in auto collisions, two in train-auto collisions, two in non-collision accidents and one from carbon monoxide.
