AMERICANISM
"Americanism is unflinching love of country; loyalty to its institutions and ideals; eagerness to defend it against all enemies; undivided allegiance to the flag; and a desire to secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity."

Plow Under Surplus Laws

Next time you cuss the high cost of living, don't blame it all on the farmer, manufacturer or retailer. Chances are that your duly elected lawmakers who are supposed to be serving you, are largely to blame.

In this country production methods surpass all the rest of the world in economy and efficiency. And distribution methods, as exemplified by chain and independent stores, have made a similar record. But, believe it or not, the law in many instances makes it impossible for stores to pass savings on to the consumer even though they wish to.

Milk is a good example. In certain states progressive retailers have figured that it would be possible to reduce the cost of milk, on a cash and carry basis, by several cents a quart, and still pay the farmer the same price. But laws and ordinances have forbidden this, and have forced the store which follows the cash and carry plan to sell at the same price as is necessary under expensive delivery and credit systems.

The same thing has happened with manufactured products, under the so-called fair trade acts which permit manufacturers of trade-marked goods in interstate commerce to fix the minimum retail at which they may be sold.

The best thing that could happen to the consumer would be a campaign to plow under laws which artificially raise or fix prices, along with class taxes aimed at some particular kind of retailer. That's one way to hold down the cost of living.

Ten Stalins

A letter to an Illinois physician from an English surgeon reveals that Dr. K. Wenkebach, an Amsterdam heart specialist, has been in Moscow to give Joseph Stalin, Russian dictator, a physical examination. Most interesting of all is the fact that ten "Stalins" were lined up for him to examine, and of those ten, two have high blood pressure.

Though Doctor Wenkebach traveled hundreds of miles to make the examination, he still is uncertain of the condition of patient. Stalin apparently took no chance that any bad news concerning his health would be circulated due to the specialist's visit.

OUTDOORS AT NIGHT

Picture the Christmas decorations on your door. With high speed films, such pictures are easy—even with a box camera, if it can be set for "time" exposures.

A GREAT many of us take snapshots indoors at night, using flood or flash bulbs and high speed film. Nowadays, such shots are about as easy as daytime pictures outdoors; in fact, anybody can take them with the most inexpensive box camera, just by following simple instructions.

However, there's another field for night photography with the new fast films . . . briefly, night scenes outdoors. These can be pictured with any camera that can be set for a "time" exposure.

Taking the pictures is simplicity itself. Place the camera on a firm support, such as a tripod, box, post, or other solid object. Load with high speed film, of course, and time the exposure according to the existing light, as follows:

When picturing street scenes, with street lights of average brightness, give a time exposure of 10 to 30 seconds with a box camera, or other camera at f/11 lens opening. If there is snow on the ground, 5 to 15 seconds will usually be ample.

When picturing illuminated objects—such as an outdoor Christmas tree, or the decorated doorway above—expose for 10 to 60 seconds with a box camera or at f/11 with the focusing type. If in doubt as to the brightness of the light, make three shots—giving say 15 seconds for one, 45 seconds for another, and 90 seconds for the third. Dim lighting, or a dark subject, requires much longer exposure than a bright subject, or one that is brightly lighted.

Floodlighted buildings can be pictured with an exposure of 10 to 40 seconds, using a box camera loaded with high speed film.

Try taking a number of outdoor shots at night this winter. Night scenes produce unusual pictures, well worth having in your picture collection. And with fast modern films, such shots are not hard to get.

Cooperative Dairy Project Approved

A cooperative project between the federal and state departments of agriculture and the state college for dairy products quality improvement work in Oregon was approved in Washington, D. C., late last week. A. W. Metzger, chief of the state department of agriculture foods and dairies division named project leader. Reports will be centered in Metzger's office in the state department of agriculture building in Salem.

With signing of this contract, this state becomes the first in the country to enter into a dairy products quality improvement setup with the federal government.

Another bit of good news in the Oregon dairy picture comes in the statement made to Mr. Metzger late last week by Roy C. Potts, marketing specialist from Washington, D. C., in charge of dairy and poultry products. Potts declared that Oregon butter has shown greater improvement the last two years than in any previous 10 years, and commended the state department of agriculture for its "valuable and outstanding field work carried directly to the farm." Potts also praised the fine work Dr. G. H. Wilster of the state college is doing in improving manufacturing methods in Oregon creameries.

Dad Teams With Son

The mothers might give us a tip. So we asked them what to say at the coming fathers and sons dinner. PALS, said the first mother. Yes—better for sonny to get good from walking with father instead of taking on stuff from the world. WATCH YOUR STEP said the next. She had been witness to a father who folded his arms as he walked and the little chap did the same, step by step, planting his little feet where the man had set his weight. WATCH YOUR STEP. BE PALS, say the mothers of coming men.

Then the boys were questioned as to how the men folks had helped them. One father had backed his high school son in the Future Farmers of America Good work it was too, for the books say this fellow's Guernsey-Jersey gave 485 and 490 lbs. of butter fat with a net of $109 and $129 these past two years. (Tillamook cheese took this product.) Not all helped alike for the next high schooler said his father gave him his Christian religion. Yea, verily. If you chance to be a guest at their table, you see the Bible brought out and read at the close of the meal as the family remains about the board.

The late John Weyerhaeuser, wealthy timberman of Tacoma paid this tribute to his old German father. "As a boy, back in Rock Island, Ill., I was converted kneeling beside the stove on the kitchen floor while father led in family worship." And there is the home of the business man out from Chicago. At the close of the morning meal the house-keeper and the maids come in to be with the family. After a chapter from the Bible has been read, all kneeled for prayer. In this group was a daughter in law who had not seemed to be a heart believer in Christ when she came to them as a bride. But the father confided. "A change has come over her; we count her born again." Married into a wealthy man's family, she was and then born again into the family of God. "For Christ hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God."—BIBLE. Will your children rise up to call you blessed? Will you meet them all again, there before the throne of God?
