The SNAPSHOT GUILD

PICTURING HALLOWE'EN

This was an easy shot—one small photo bulb inside the pumpkin, a small and large one in reflectors outside, and a snapshot exposure with high speed film in the camera. Get one like it for Halloween.

HALLOWE'EN is, or should be, a very special occasion for the amateur photographer. Probably none of us would like a steady, year-round diet of weird, grotesque pictures—but for occasional spice and variety, they're fine. And Halloween activities provide plenty of opportunity for such shots.

There are, in fact, two kinds of pictures—record shots, covering the Halloween party and the children's costumes; and "stunt" shots, with odd or extraordinary lightings.

The best stunt lighting for many Halloween shots is to have your photo lights low—that is, down close to the floor, so that the light shines up into the subject's face. This suggests the lighting you get from a gypsy fire, or a witch's cauldron.

Silhouette shots are also a good Halloween stunt, and taking them can be part of the Halloween party. Just stretch a white sheet over a doorway, illuminate it from behind, and pose the costumed guests in front of it with the room lights turned off. Have two large amateur flood bulbs in reflectors, about five feet back of the sheet; put the camera on a film support, and take quick "open and shut" time exposures on high speed film.

Try some stunt lightings with the jack-o'-lantern, too. For snapshots with a box camera, use a small photo bulb inside the pumpkin, and a large and small bulb in reflectors outside, as for snapshots at night. Hang the bulb inside so that it does not touch the surface of the pumpkin.

High speed film, of course, is right for all these Halloween shots. In taking the party pictures, place your photo lights in advance at strategic spots—such as the apple-bobbing tub, or the fortune-teller's tent. Then just stand by, and shoot as opportunities occur.

Keep a complete record. A good Halloween party is worth picturing in detail—and there's a lot of satisfaction in having a well-rounded picture story, to show your friends and the parents of your children's guests.

John van Guilder

Mrs. Edwin E. Thompson, the president of Washington county Council.

New county officers who attended the school of instruction in Portland last Tuesday will present outlines and suggestions for the year's work at this meeting. They will be equipped to assist officers whose duties are new to them. It is hoped all will take advantage of this opportunity.

This is the regular monthly Washington county Parent Teacher council meeting. Sessions will open at 10:00 a.m. and are to close at 3:00 p.m., with an hour for lunch. Members will bring their own lunches and coffee will be served by the local association.

MORE STUDENTS SETS NEW RECORD

Oregon State College. A heavy influx of new students particularly women, has brought a 2% increase in fall term registration at Oregon State college, which will reach a new record term total of about 4,700 when the late registration is complete.

An 11% increase in new students was shown, with 1,862 enrolled at the end of the first week, compared with 1,682 at the corresponding time a year ago. Old students were off slightly, with a total of 2,664 as compared to 2,746 last year.

Enrollment of women was 6% ahead of last year, and, with more than 1,400 now registered, the co-ed student body is the largest in history. All classes are larger than last year with the exception of the seniors. Among the different schools, the school of engineering led with 1,077 at the end of the first week, followed in order by home economics, agriculture, secretarial science, science, forestry education and pharmacy.
