

Forum Urges America Mobilize Economic Strength

Alfred P. Sloan, Jr., Chairman of General Motors, sets forum theme, "Mobilizing America's Economic Strength," at luncheon given by him for 500 of the country's leaders to hear an expert discussion of this important phase of the national defense program. Participating in the forum (left to right) were: Paul G. Hoffman, president of Studebaker Corporation; C. F. Kettering, of General Motors research fame; George V. Denny, Jr. (standing), Town Meeting of the Air, who served as moderator; Mr. Sloan; Dr. Harold G. Moulton, president of Brookings Institution, and Dr. Sumner H. Slichter, Harvard University economist.

With its vast untapped resources of men and materials America has an economic potential of sufficient reserve power to take the defense program in its stride and emerge stronger and greater than ever before in its history.

This was the ringing challenge issued recently to 500 of the nation's leading industrialists and business men in New York at a forum discussion of the subject

"Mobilizing America's Economic Strength"

As guests of Alfred P. Sloan, Jr., Chairman of General Motors, the luncheon gathering heard two prominent economists, an industrialist and a research engineer, join in urging industry not to curtail unnecessarily the normal flow of goods and services in this period of emergency but to mobilize its strength on all fronts.

A strong right arm and a rugged constitution to back it up was the prescription recommended by these authorities. Defense has first call on the country's resources, they said, but America has sufficient reserves of power to build high its defense ramparts without having to neglect those foundations of normal productivity which underlie both the ramparts and the way of life behind them.

RETURNS COMING IN FOR XMAS SEALS

Returns for the Christmas Seals are fast pouring into the seal sale headquarters, according to Mrs. Moegen, chairman. She reports that the Public Health Association has high hopes of realizing many more dollars off the sale of seals through the mails than from methods used in former years.

Washington county has in recent years raised more than its quota in the annual Christmas Seal Campaign. This comes from the full realization of the work our local Health Association is trying to do. Tuberculosis knows no season. It claims its victims in December and June. We appeal again to all to support the campaign so our year-round tuberculosis program way not lag.

Mrs. Morgan wishes to remind all who have received the seals and plan to buy them to send the money for them in the self-addressed envelope back to her soon. She also wishes to impress upon everyone the fact that there will be no house-to-house solicitation by anyone this year. All seals have been sent directly to families all over the county, and they will not sell them to anyone.

COLLEGE REVEALS WATER IMPURITIES

Oregon State College, Corvallis. Only an average of 22% of the samples of water submitted to the O.S.C. bacteriology department from all parts of the state are definitely pure and safe to drink, reports G. V. Copson, head of that department.

Figures show that 40% of the samples submitted are definitely bad and 38% are doubtful. Members of 4-H clubs throughout rural and suburban areas are active in having samples sent in for testing, says Copson. Tests are made for purity, odor and hardness of water.

ST. MARY'S HOME

Bobbie Rowe of the Portland Hockey club has invited the boys of St. Mary's as his guests at a hockey game at the Portland Ice Coliseum Sunday night.

St. Mary's played Beaverton high there Tuesday and won. The return game was played on Thursday at St. Mary's.

The basketball game between St. Mary's and the Central Catholic High school of Portland next Friday night will dedicate Central's new gymnasium.

The Christmas holiday vacation at St. Mary's home begins Saturday morning, December 21, and students report back for duty Sunday evening, January 5.

Farm Foreman Cheser Strauch and family have returned from a week's vacation in California where they visited relatives. He was fully caught up with the fall work on the big Home farm.

The Home is installing an inter-communication system to facilitate communications between the office and the various buildings on the campus.
