From the Exploitation and Publicity Committee Pan-ama-Pacific International Exposition Co.

New Orleans' ambition to hold an international exposition in 1915, celebrating the completion of the Panama Canal will be blighted in the bud if opposition to the $6,000,000 state exposition tax amendment develops as vigorously throughout Louisiana on election day as the threats of the southern state's citizens promise. And without Louisiana's aid the Crescent city will be in a bad way indeed, for her citizens have subscribed only $1,500,000 as compared with the $7,500,000 subscribed by San Francisco's citizens. In addition, the financial condition of the city and the state is far from healthy.

Indeed, Louisiana could learn much concerning progress and united development from California. In many of the smaller towns of the southern state, the cry is being heard that New Orleans has not herself supplied sufficient of the sinews of expositions, and asks too much of the state; therefore, the city is being compared with San Francisco, which has subscribed a million and a half more than it asks the state to vote, and the Crescent City is unhappy whenever the comparison is made.

With California a unit in November, and Louisiana in opposition at the polls, New Orleans will be compelled to retire from the exposition contest. That she is in no position to proceed without the $6,000,000 the people of the state are asked to contribute is shown conclusively in her inability to dispose of $7,000,000 of water and sewerage bonds, even though a legislative enactment allowing the buyer to become the fiscal agent of the bonds was secured.

Good Literature.

Good literature is necessary to a people's glory and happiness. Good literature is the clearing house of human reason. The thoughts of man's deliberations which he has put on paper are manifold. We may call up, if not in our private libraries in the public libraries, any of the ancient or modern worthies of learning, human or divine, from all nations, confer with them and republish their thoughts, their ideas, their conclusions. A man who attempts literature, who tries to edit a periodical he desires read, has wonderful opportunities. A noted writer recently said, referring to the indexes of modern publications which group and classify, "Blessed be God that He hath set up so many clear lamps; now none but the wilfully blind can plead darkness." The lesson of this is that if you desire to know or publish the truth about anything and do not know what the truth is, you can find it. There is not a form of literature known that is not found in the bible. It is as many sided as human life. It was indited, not from any age, but from many. It is greatly varied in form, in matter, in excellence of literary work, in ethical and spiritual quality. In it is found legend, history, poetry, war songs, love songs, sublime descriptions of nature, devout prose and poems of worship; there are biographies, collations of laws and state papers, genealogies, proverbs of wisdom, accounts of religious institutions and ceremonials, romances, love stories, condemnation of land grabbers, views of the future, splendid letters such as Paul wrote, the teachings and preachings of the Nazarene, etc.

The Normal Schools.

The whole function of the Normal School is to train and educate teachers. All grant the absolute need of this work. The state has three schools, one at Monmouth, Weston and Ashland. This property is owned by the State, and controlled by one Board of Regents. These initiative bills take the question out of politics entirely, and this is as it should be. We speak directly of Monmouth; this school is centrally located, and the work done by Pres. Campbell and Prof. Ressler is a sufficient guarantee of the quality of its students.

If you pay taxes on $1000.00, it will cost you only four cents a year to operate this school. This gives the children of the parents of moderate means an equal chance with those who are able to send their children to schools provided with special instructors.

The welfare of your child, and the interests of the public schools, that great leveler and bulwark of our nation, warrant you in voting Yes on No. 318.

Looking Backward.

Prospecting on the Sweetwater. — Months had passed without seeing an Indian; the stampede of miners from the town had more than half depopulated it, still there were more than a thousand men left, men who were not afraid to draw a gun and pull the trigger when occasion demanded.

Farther away the prospectors scattered over the plains and mountains; they returned safely, and thus even the less adventurous gained in courage.

About the month of August a party of miners returned without giving any account of their trip; they fixed up sluice boxes, bought a supply of provisions, and in the dark of night, departed as silently as they had been while at work. The next morning the tracks of their team and wagon were taken up and followed.

It was extremely hot weather; at noon time the air was in a continually flickering motion, the sands of the plains were hot enough to burn the feet of the travelers through their shoes. Many returned discouraged. Among those who followed and held out was the writer of this incident, his young friend Albert, and an Israelite, whose name I forget.

The first evening we reached the mouth of strawberry creek. Here was an old house, empty, and many a one would gladly have occupied it; not so with us three. The Sioux trail passed there, and more than one white man had been captured or slain in it; the creek bottom was thickly overgrown with willows, and there we located a camp. Caution warned us not to make a fire to cook supper, as this would give spies an opportunity to detect our whereabouts. We had each of us a two weeks' supply of eatables, and after the lunch was over our tired limbs caused us very soon to roll into our blankets and fall asleep.

It was some time after midnight when a number of horses passed not far from where the light house stood. There they stopped a few minutes and then proceeded towards the town.

At daybreak we bounded up with the idea of traveling a few miles in the cool of the morning and make breakfast later. To see what was going on in the neighborhood, we took to a long ridge, lying parallel with the creek; from here we could see in all directions for many miles.

The sun had just risen above the horizon, when, far in the distance from our rear we could see a cloud of dust arising. In a few minutes more we learned that the Indians had made another raid. This time they had stolen a number of horses and were coming our way. Quickly our packs were laid on the ground. In doing this, the fast approaching Indians saw us, and turned the fleeing horses northward; only two of their men rode near and toward us.

The Israelite had no weapons; to him I gave my revolver with the remark, "five shots for the Indians, the last one for yourself; don't be captured." The poor fellow went on his knees, placed something like a tape over his head; the ends he held in his hands and thus prayed that Jehovah would send him aid and help. I told friend Albert to step behind a good sized rock while I tried to take shelter behind another one; however, before I could reach it the two Indians halted their horses and looked at me. I was fully exposed, and in order to prevent their firing at me, I turned my head and called Albert, telling him to fire. No sooner had I said it, than a sharp crack of his rifle was heard, and one of the two Indians leaned over; the other one shot at me but missed, and then fled with the wounded one following.

When all was over we returned to our friend who was still bowed down in prayer, claiming that his supplication had brought us relief.

Having lost much time we concluded to push on until dinner time, and then make up for a lost breakfast. Hotter and hotter the sun sent its rays upon us three heavily loaded wanderers; perspiration pouring off of us in streams and the heat drying it upon our face and clothes, formed a crust of salt. How we longed for a drink of water! but none was to be found; there was no help. We had to march on until we could find some.

Abuse of the Initiative.

It is a gross abuse of the rights guaranteed by the Initiative and Referendum Amendment to the Oregon Constitution to bring up woman suffrage at every general election. This measure was submitted in 1900 and beaten by a plurality of 2137. In 1906 it was again proposed and was beaten by 10173. In 1908 it was again on the ballot and it was beaten by a majority of 21649. Notwithstanding these repeated defeats, more decisive at each election, the same measure is again on the ballot this year. The ballot title is misleading and indicates a proposal to give votes to tax paying women only, but the measure to be voted on is the same proposition which the people have so often and so recently condemned. It should be voted down this year by an increased majority, especially because of the fraud undertaken to be perpetrated on the people by the use of a false and misleading title on the ballot.

Arrow Points.

There is nothing in the world worth getting angry about.

He must be a thorough fool who can learn nothing from his own folly.

There are people who are so afraid of doing wrong that they do nothing.

You can't be a good business man unless you have learned to be a good citizen.

Minds of moderate caliber usually condemn everything that is beyond their range.

A man's ideal, like his heroism, constantly recedes from him as he preaches it.

How some people do enjoy rolling up their sleeves and then bossing the job that somebody else does.

Only those people who start something can fail. The failure then has some satisfaction in knowing he tried, and trying is no disgrace though the attempt be a failure.

About this time of the year things get pretty warm in the political pot. Let 'em sizzle! You just keep cool! If you talk politics with your neighbor, be reasonable. Loud talk and yelling never convinced anybody.
