In the Circuit Court of the State of Oregon, in and for Coos County.

James Tierney, Plaintiff
 vs.
 Margaret Roehl, Peter Schneider and C. R. Wade, Defendants.

Suit in Equity—
 SUMMONS

To Margaret Roehl and Peter Schneider, defendants above named:

IN THE NAME OF THE STATE OF OREGON, You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint filed against you in the above entitled suit within six weeks from the date of the first publication of this summons, which is Tuesday, February 28, 1911, and if you fail to appear and answer in said suit within the time prescribed, a judgment and decree will be taken against you for want of an answer and the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in plaintiff's complaint, a succinct statement of which is as follows, to-wit:

That a certain conveyance executed by defendant, Peter Schneider, on or about March 19, 1910, to defendant, Margaret Roehl, purporting to convey eighty-five feet of the East end of lots 1 and 2, of block 7, in Woolen Mill Addition to Bandon, Coos County, Oregon, and also lots 6 and 7, of block 8, in Azalea Park addition to Bandon, Coos County, Oregon, as the same appear platted and of record in the office of the County Clerk of said Coos County, be declared fraudulent: that the said deed be set aside and the said property subjected to the lien of a certain judgment obtained by plaintiff against said defendant, Peter Schneider, on or about December 15, 1910, in said Court for the sum of $568.00 or thereabouts, with the costs of this suit; that all right, title, interest, claim, lien and estate of defendant C. R. Wade, therein be forever foreclosed, and for such other and further relief as to the court may seem meet, just and equitable.

Service of this summons upon you is made by publication thereof, pursuant to an order made by the Hon. John S. Coke, Judge of the Circuit Court of the State of Oregon for Coos County, which said order bears date February 25, 1911, and directs the publication of this summons in the Bandon Recorder, a weekly newspaper of general circulation, published at Bandon, Coos County, Oregon, and directs that the same be published in said paper once a week for the period of six weeks.

G. T. TREADGOLD,
 Attorney for Plaintiff,
 Bandon, Oregon.

A Spy of President Lincoln
 By DONALD CHAMBERLIN
 Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

Few persons have ever been aware of the connection President Lincoln had with spies. It is singular how those can be found to do such work, especially since an ignominious death is the penalty for being caught. The strangest feature of the spy system is that the more delicate woman should have done her share in it.

One day a girl about twenty-four years old went to Allan Pinkerton, who was at the head of the United States secret service bureau, and told him that she had lived at Richmond, the capital of the Confederacy, and was supposed to be a secessionist. She proposed to go there, intending to offer her services to the Confederate government, to return to Washington and take back information to Richmond. In other words, by pretending to be in the Confederate service she hoped to get information of their intentions or condition for the Federal government. She said her object was to make money to lift her sick mother out of poverty.

Pinkerton set several traps for her in order to test her fidelity to the Federal cause and, having satisfied himself of it, sent her to Mr. Lincoln. This was in 1861, when the struggle was drawing to a close. The work Mr. Lincoln gave her to do was to discover what commissary stores were in Richmond and what further supplies could be obtained.

Kate Beale went to Richmond, going through the lines without much trouble. Her accent, which she had acquired in the south, was distinctly southern and a great help to her. She wormed herself into the confidence of the wife of an important officer in the Confederate commissary department and asked him if there was not some plan by which she could assist southern sympathizers in the north in running entables into the south. He told her there were only two ways, by blockade running and by getting a vessel to some spot of southern territory unwatched by northern troops. She proposed to start an expedition on the last named plan.

She was taken to President Davis and to the commissary general. She told them that she knew southern men in Baltimore who would run supplies through if sure they would be met by a southern force. After much discussion a point was named where supplies might be landed.

During these discussions the spy learned that if Grant succeeded in taking Petersburg, all supplies being cut off from the south, the troops and people of Richmond had almost no provisions whatever to rely upon. The surrender must follow very soon.

Having gained the information she wished for, Miss Beale made her preparations to return to Washington. The day before she intended to set out she was met on the street by a man—one of the many Washington southern sympathizers—who was carrying information to Richmond and who had seen her not long before coming out of Allan Pinkerton's office. He looked at her with a pair of steel gray eyes under bushy eyebrows and with a more than ordinary interest. She did not remember ever having seen him before, but considering her mission she felt sure she was in danger.

She pretended not to notice the man's interest in her. Walking on, but without turning to see if he followed her, she spied an empty cab. Beckoning to the driver, he pulled up at the curb, and she entered, telling him to drive her to the presidential mansion. As she was driven away she saw the man still looking at her, but pretending not to notice her. When she stopped at the president's home and alighted the man came hurrying up. She went in and asked for Mr. Davis. He was busy at the time; but, having waited awhile to see him, she went away. When she passed out of the door the man with the bushy eyebrows had disappeared. Apparently her bluff game had succeeded.

But she dare not remain in Richmond a minute longer. Not daring to go directly northward, she concluded to first go south and told the cabman to drive her to the battlefields that had been fought on by Lee and McClellan two years before, and, arriving there, she dismissed him.

Hiring vehicles where she could, walking where she could not hire them, sometimes floating in a stolen boat on the James river, she at last reached Fortress Monroe. In possession of the Federal forces. There she found a naval transport about to leave for the north and, reaching New York, took a train for Washington.

When the name of Kate Beale was taken up to Mr. Lincoln he muttered a "thank God" and directed that she should be immediately conducted to him. When she entered the room where he was and he arose to greet her it seemed to her that his tall, lank figure would never cease rising. He took both her hands in his, and his expressive eyes told her how relieved he was to see her.

"I have important news for you, Mr. Lincoln," she said, and she told him what she had learned.

It was but a month after that that Grant took Petersburg and the Confederacy collapsed.

Kate Beale was paid a large sum from the secret service fund, with which she ministered to her mother's wants. She said afterward that the work was so fascinating that had the war continued longer she would have made another trip.

"I am going to quit that suburb."
 "It must be that the neighbors do not bring anything in."
 "Oh, yes, they do."
 "That ought to be some attraction."
 "They bring in their appetites."

Partly Qualified.

"What can I ever do for you?" said the charming young heiress, still dripping from her accidental bath. "You have saved my life."
 "You might marry me," said the modest hero.
 "But you are not a duke or an earl or anything like that, are you?" she asked doubtfully.
 "No, but I resemble them in many ways."
 "Oh, how lovely! In what way?"
 "Financially."

Taking His Word.

The good old fashioned winter
 When grandpa was a lad
 Was harder than they ever
 Before or since have had,
 And true as any gospel
 This may or may not be,
 There is no way of knowing:
 We can't go back to see.

The snow was deep as mountains,
 The wind a blizzard swept
 Across the freezing landscape,
 And school was seldom kept.
 The water froze in holding,
 The steam went up as snow,
 No; I am not mistaken,
 My grandpa told me so.

Guilty Conscience.

"A dark woman is about to cross your path. Beware of her," said the solemn fortune teller, who was trying to give the victim something fresh and original for his half dollar.
 "Has that washerwoman found my address again?" exclaimed the man frankly.
 "Oh, no! This one is a siren."
 "Where did you say I was to avoid her? I will go this very afternoon and get in practice."

Couldn't.

"Why don't you keep to the straight and narrow way?"
 "Me?"
 "Yes, you."
 "I couldn't."
 "And why not?"
 "You see, I am a broad minded sort of chap, so I have to cut a wide swath."

His Opinion.

"Just look at her!"
 "I am looking."
 "She is trying to look pretty."
 "She doesn't have to try very hard, does she?"

It's Two Bad.

"Walter?"
 "Yes?"
 "This egg is bad."
 "Better try another, sir."

A Sight.

See the resolutions,
 Once so fresh and new,
 Warranted when taken
 They would stick like glue.
 Now they are so mossy
 That you think it right
 And good taste to hide them
 From the public sight.

When you put them over
 And the year was new
 It looked easy money
 Then to see them through.
 You felt very certain
 They would water hold,
 But how soon they faded
 When your zeal got cold!

Now the pipe is taken
 From its hiding place,
 And the way you're puffing
 Is a rank disgrace,
 And were you invited
 At the bowl to sip
 When no one were looking
 You might take a nip.

Give the resolutions
 Thirty days of grace,
 It is seldom longer
 They can save their face.
 Men who wait till New Year's
 Comes around again
 To shake off their meanness
 Cannot lose it then.
