A Baby Giraffe Which Was Born In America.

How many people have ever seen a baby giraffe? Very few at the best. In all there have been only four baby giraffes born in the western hemisphere; three of these were born at the Cincinnati zoological garden. The first two lived but a short time, but the third one, which was born Sept. 1, 1910, in the Cincinnati garden, is still alive and is one of the prettiest little animals that you might wish to see.

Giraffes can utter no sound—they are mutes—but the two old giraffes looked on the young one with eyes as full of expression and appreciation as if they had human intelligence, and one scarcely seemed to notice that they made no sound whatever.

The picture shows the little giraffe when it was two days old. It was then five feet one inch in height and weighed about ninety pounds. It began to grow right away, so that at the age of about four months it measured six feet six inches. That certainly is a marvelous growth, and a boy or girl who would grow over a foot in four or five months would be considered a most unusual phenomenon. When we stop to think, however, that the old giraffe is almost fourteen feet high and can reach a foot or two farther by straightening out its head and neck, it is easy to see that the baby giraffe has to do some growing to catch up with its father and mother.—St. Nicholas.

Told by a Bird. To say "A little bird told me" is a common way of getting out of telling the real way information is obtained. Little birds have, however, told important stories sometimes by means of notes fastened about their legs or necks. The birds most often employed for this purpose are pigeons, but a well known fable was once carried by a seagull.

Over twenty years ago a large ocean steamer, Atlantis, which ran between Liverpool and Calcutta, was lost. No message was ever received from her but one, and this was found some five months after she had started on her last voyage, tied about the neck of a seagull in the Indian sea. The note read: "Atlantis struck on the Harard rock. We are all lost. Father Coathe." No trace of the wreck or its crew ever came to light, nor was it known who "Father Coathe" was.

An Intelligent Puss. A young lady bookkeeper in Boston has been in the habit for some time of giving the office cat a piece of meat for her lunch every day, precaution being taken to lay down a piece of paper to prevent the meat greasing the floor. The other day at lunch hour, when the young lady happened to have no meat in her basket, puss begged for some in her most intelligent fashion. Finding no meat coming, the cat ran to the wastebasket, dragged out a newspaper and laid it on the floor at the young lady's feet. This appeal was so touching that the young lady went out and bought meat for the intelligent animal.

A Storehouse. In the old birds' nests that are placed near the ground in shrubs and small trees close to hazel-bushes and bittersweet vines in the country you will often find a handful of hazelnuts or bittersweet berries. They were put there by the white footed mice and the meadow mice that visit these storehouses regularly. A white footed mouse will often cover a bird's nest with fine dried grass and inner bark and make a nest for itself.

Harry and the Searchlight. Harry, a six-year-old, was greatly excited over his first trip on a steamboat, and his father allowed him to stay on deck with him for awhile in the evening. His attention was at once directed to the light of the searchlight moving to and fro. Excitedly he grasped his father's hand and said: "Daddy, look! There must be a happy count near here. See how he wags his tail."

Strange Sights. Tell me, did you ever see Monkeys climb a banian tree? Banian trees, perhaps you know, On the nursery floor can grow. Troops of monkeys half the day In the great wide branches play. Frolic and make friends with you— If your aunt tells them to!

I've had measles, so, you see, Aunt comes and plays with me. Aunt makes a lion roar Right behind the nursery door. Makes an elephant poke his head Through the window near my bed. Makes the nursery somehow look Like a lovely picture book.—Francis Banine in Youth's Companion

A STUDY OF NAPOLEON.

Mental Changes of the Fiery Corsican Shown by His Chirography. Interesting and exhaustive studies have been made in France of Napoleon's chirography. When a young man Napoleon did not have a bad hand, although, like some other great men, he could never learn to spell. When he was an artillery officer his writing was simple and legible, as his life was simple and direct. But when the Corsican Captain Bonaparte distinguished himself at the siege of Toulon and became the French General Bonaparte his writing took on what has been called "a furious illegibility."

Curiously enough, from that time there seems to have been a gradual degeneration until, profoundly discouraged and utterly humiliated, he scratched an undecipherable, misspelled scrawl of submission to the prince regent on July 14, 1815. It is said that this change from a simple to a confused writing began at a certain date—namely, with a report, skillfully garbled, of the part he took in what Carlyle called the "whiff of grapeshot that spoke from the steps of St. Roch on the 13th Vendemiaire" (Oct. 5, 1795).

The culminating eccentricity of his tortuous strokes of the pen was exhibited in the letter P. This showed plainly the mental changes of the man who would unhesitatingly declare war against the first comer, who would divorce the wife he loved, who would propose a kingdom of Haiti for Louis XVIII., who would freeze nearly a million men upon the steppes of Russia. This letter P became of strange and abnormal form. It was excessively developed. For twenty years the great general used this extravagant, and, according to the investigators, accusing letter, especially noticeable in his later unroyal signature, NP.—Harper's Weekly.

FORETOLD BY DREAMS.

Two Remarkable Cases in Which Sleep Warnings Came True.

"I dreamed that the ship was in a heavy sea, that a big wave came over her bows, pressed down upon her, and then she rolled over on her starboard side and disappeared."

This is not an extract from a story. It is evidence, given on oath, during the inquiry at London into the mysterious disappearance of the Warrenton vessel which, on her second voyage, mysteriously disappeared in July, 1909, and has never been heard of since. And so impressed was the passenger with the vision that he left the vessel at Durban, from which point she continued on her ill-fated voyage. This one more was added to the extraordinary coincidences in which dreams have figured.

The third Lord Waterford was able to verify a story of an extraordinary dream coming true. Telling one day with the landlord of the inn in the village close to Carrigrohane, a man rushed up and said there had been a murder on the hills. "Then it must be the little one," said the landlord, at which Lord Waterford, not unnaturally, became very suspicious. The landlord proceeded to explain that in the night he dreamed that two men had come to the inn and that the taller of the two had murdered the shorter with a very curious knife.

He told his dream to his wife, who laughed at him. But, to his horror, the men he had seen while asleep came to the inn, and one used the curious knife to cut up his food. They left, and soon afterward news of the murder arrived. Search was made for a tall man answering to the landlord's description, and one was quickly arrested. In prison he confessed he had murdered his short companion.—Pearson's Weekly.

The Cowboy's Handkerchief. "Have you ever wondered why the cowboy pictures by painters who have made a study of western life depict the man of the plains with his red bandanna halfway down on his chest instead of being snugly around his neck?" queried a ranch owner of California.

"I'll tell you. When a cowboy starts on a long ride over the plains one of his principal annoyances is having to wipe dust from his eyes. His heavy mustaches make it impossible to use his hands, and he ties his handkerchief loosely around his neck and when occasion requires uses it to clear his eyes. It is the most convenient place to carry the handkerchief while riding a horse."—Washington Post.
