Crater Lake National Park.

Many thousands of years ago among the majestic volcanoes of the Cascade Range, towered one, perhaps the loftiest of them all, which has now disappeared. After the cataclysm which swallowed this huge mountain there remained, however, an enormous crater, a caldera, which more than compensates in interest for the loss of the mountain. There are thousands of craters in the United States, but there is only one great caldera, and that contains Crater Lake, truly one of the wonders of America. If Crater Lake were situated in the bosom of the Appalachians thousands of people would visit it annually; if it were an Alpine crater many Americans would rave over it as the choicest gem of European scenery. As it is, although the Crater Lake region has been a national park since 1902, the people who have visited it number only a few thousands. But an awakening is at hand; the railroad is building a line close to the park, the Government is planning roads and trails, and within a short time it will be the fault only of the people themselves if they fail to visit this wonderful region and receive impressions never to be effaced from memory.

As a pioneer in the field, the United States Geological Survey has made a careful topographic survey of the Crater Lake National Park. Pearson Chapman, Government topographer, spent two field seasons in the park and surveyed every peak, slope and valley, and the resulting map, with 50 foot contour lines, is being engraved and will be issued by the Survey about June 1st.

From this topographic map one gets an idea of the remarkable tragedy which must have occurred in the dim past, when a mountain, probably rivaling Mount Shasta in height, disappeared into the bowels of the earth. The surface of Crater Lake is 6,177 feet above sea level; the lake is nearly 6 miles in diameter and is surrounded by a rim of rugged rock rising from 1,000 to 2,000 feet about it. The lake is in many places nearly 2,000 feet deep and its surface is broken only by Wizard Island, the result of the final gasp of the dying volcanic forces.

Wizard Island, a cinder cone which rises nearly 1,000 feet above the lake, is itself a young and perfect volcano, having a little crater of its own. Several other smaller cones were pushed upward, but none appear above the water's surface.

At one time it was a question whether this ancient mountain, which has been restored in fancy and named Mount Mazama, did not explode and blow away in ashes and scoria like Krakatoa or Pelée, but this theory has been overturned by geologists who find unmistakable evidence that the mountain sank back into the earth. The surrounding country, according to J. S. Diller, a geologist of the United States Geological Survey indicates unquestionably that at some time during the Tertiary period, when many of the high peaks of the Cascade Range were flaming beacons, great streams of molten rock issued from Mount Mazama, accompanied by thunderous explosions and ejections of pumice which to-day covers the land's surface for miles.

The later of these eruptions occurred, it is believed, during the glacial period, the great streams of ice and lava alternating and causing stupendous conflicts between the two elements, filling the air with steam clouds and flooding the lower plains. Later came the final convulsion which demolished the upper mile of Mount Mazama.

When Crater Lake really comes into its own, people will row across its beautiful blue, bronze and purple waters, glance up at the towering cliffs, and realize that they are in the very interior of one of the greatest extinct volcanoes in the world. The collapse of Mount Mazama is stated by Mr. Diller to have been the crowning event in the history of the Cascade region.

Situated in the midst of an otherwise waterless region; this lake furnishes the underground water supplies for many streams radiating from it in almost every direction. Most of the approaches to the lake lead through splendid forests, valley meadows and natural pastures.

The highest point in the Crater Lake National Park, as shown on the Survey's map, is Scott Peak, 8,941 feet in elevation. This was simply a minor peak on the southeast side of Mount Mazama. From it, the view, according to Mr. Chapman, is incomparably fine. On the opposite rim of the lake, apparently but a pistol shot distant, so clear is the air, stand out the The Watchman and Glacier Peak, of nearly equal height with Scott Peak. To the south lies the great Klamath Lake, and far to the south Mount Shasta loses its snow-capped crown in the skies. A still farther distance to the north looms Mount Hood.

In the Government survey the park was surrounded by 150 iron boundary posts, and concrete piers have been erected at the four corners and the two entrances, one on the south and the other on the west.

The map of Crater Lake National Park will be issued in two editions, the regulation map and the pocket edition, folded and bound in covers. These maps may be obtained from the Director of the United States Geological Survey at Washington after June 1st.

THE GRANGE

AN EFFECTIVE GRANGE.

The Hall is Open Every Evening For Social Intercourse.

Edward Van Alstyne, a prominent institute lecturer of New York, has this to say about an efficient grange that he visited at Bainville, Orange county, near Newburg:

A neat hall, costing about $2,500, stands out in the open country a half mile from the end of the trolley line. It is located here because it is a central point between two hamlets and one strong grange could be maintained here rather than two weak ones at the hamlets on either side. This hall is open any night in the week for young or old who care to gather there for social, intellectual or agricultural intercourse. The people avail themselves of it. Not far away is a rural school, and near it is a half acre devoted to a school garden. This had its rise in Bainville grange. A committee was appointed to take the matter up with the school trustees. Francis B. Kelley, a gardener and florist of many years experience, a native of Greenock, Scotland, whose school gardens are conducted on a large scale, has had charge of the work. Some forty-six children, ranging in age from seven to fourteen years, are enrolled in the garden school. Even during the vacation months the attendance averages twenty. The garden is 250 feet long by 60 feet wide. There are sixteen plots, in which are grown a variety of vegetables, the children doing all the planting, weeding and whatever other work is necessary. Last year the state department of agriculture awarded sixteen certificates to the children for proficiency and one to Mr. Kelley as instructor.

Japanese Wedding Ceremony.
A Japanese wedding is a quiet ceremony. The bride, dressed in a white silk kimono and white veil, sits on the floor facing her affianced husband. Near them are two tables, upon one of which are two cups, a bottle of sake and a kettle with two spouts. On the other are a miniature plum tree, typifying the beauty of the bride; a miniature fir tree, representing the strength of the bridegroom, and a stork standing on a tortoise, signifying long life and felicity. The bride and bridegroom drink alternately from the two scouted kettle in token that they will henceforth share each other's joys and sorrows. After the wedding the bride's veil is hid away, to be used as her shroud when she dies.

Too Sensitive.
It was the first night after the show. The leading woman's mother was downcast.

"What's the trouble, dear?" asked the leading woman in surprise. "I made a brilliant hit tonight."
The old lady was surprised.
"Did you, Sophie? I heard the audience shouting 'Play right! Play right!' and I thought you had failed."
And the leading woman laughed in amusement.

"Why, my dear, they were shouting 'Playwright! Playwright!'"—Chicago Tribune.

Van Antler (entertaining Witherby at his country home)—Now, old man, if you should happen to want anything in the night just touch this bell. Witherby—Never!
