Ten Reasons for Home Buying.

An Omaha trade publication gives ten reasons for buying at home, all of them good ones—as follows:

1. Your home merchants can duplicate the prices made by any responsible concern anywhere on goods of equal quality, in the same quantities and on the same basis of delivery and payment.
2. You can examine your purchases in the home stores and be assured of satisfaction before investing your money.
3. Your home merchants are always ready and willing to make right for any error or any defective article purchased.
4. Your home merchants help support, through direct and indirect taxation, your schools, churches, libraries, and other public institutions.
5. Your home merchants help make a good local market for everything you have to sell, and that market—more than any other factor—gives your land its present value.
6. Your home merchants are your good friends, ever ready to extend a helping hand in time of need.
7. If this community is good enough for you to live in and make your money in, 'tis good enough to spend it in.
8. The best citizens in this community are those who believe in and practice home patronage. Be one of the best!
9. Merchants in the distant city give you nothing valuable that the home merchants cannot, and will not do for you many things the latter do gladly.
10. Every dollar kept in circulation in this community helps increase property values. Every dollar sent out of this community that could as well be spent here, hinders the wheels of progress and helps to build up some other community at your expense.

Japan.
Japan seems to be the only country in the world that has never been really conquered, so no wonder the Japanese carry a stiff upper lip. Some centuries ago a great Chinese expedition under Emperor Kubla Khan set out to take in the Japanese island. Ten only of the 100,000 were sent back alive to tell the tale.

The Raised Alphabet.
Dr. Howe invented the raised alphabet for the blind in 1834.

Our Oldest Settlement.
Acama, an Indian village of western New Mexico, is said to be the oldest settlement in this country. It was referred to by the Spanish thirty years before St. Augustine was founded.

Short, but Sharp.
The sting of a bee is only one thirty-second of an inch long.

Eyes of a Leech.
Many creatures possess more than two eyes which do not see together. A leech, for example, has ten eyes on the top of its head which do not act in concert.

A Plant That Feigns Death.
In South America there is a plant, a species of mimosa, which feigns death for the purpose, naturalists think, of preventing grass eating animals from eating it. In its natural state it is bright green, but as soon as it is touched it collapses into a tangle of apparently dead brown stems.

Caring Apples.
When apples have to be cored, but served whole, it is advisable to core before peeling them, as they are then less liable to break.

Rhinoceros and Tapir.
The rhinoceros and the tapir, both found frequently in the tertiary deposits, are still represented by almost identical forms. One species at least of the rhinoceros survived unchanged long after the appearance of man. Their range extended as far north as Siberia, and their bones have been found in caverns in England, France and Germany, on the banks of the Iravadi and at the foot of the Himalayas.

Chinese Camphor.
Camphor is manufactured in China, but it is not a refined and crystallized product like the Formosan, but resembles dark sugar.

BY THE KING'S EDICT

By MARTHA L. WRIGHT

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

As to the matter of Edmond Koyle, yeoman, who was sentenced to be hanged in the county of Kent, in the reign of King Edward IV., this is the story:

Koyle had just come of age, and there was a celebration in honor of the event on his father's farm. The young men and maidens danced on the green, and it was noticed that Edmond Koyle and Margaret Manning, a comely lass of nineteen years, danced many times together. Moreover, some who were there saw old Simon Winter standing by himself looking on at the couple, scowling and tapping his foot angrily on the floor, for he had that day applied to Farmer Manning for Margaret to wife, and now he saw that her heart was going out to Koyle.

That night the church was robbed of the silver service plate, and, search being made, it was found hid in the barn on the farm to which young Koyle had the day before come to an inheritance, his father having died two years ago. And there were those who averred that they had seen Edmond carrying plunder from the church at dead of night.

So the young man was tried before the judge, and those persons who claimed that they had seen him carrying a load from the church swore to the fact, and Edmond was sentenced to be hanged by the neck till he was dead.

Edmond was defended before the judge by Montgomery, his advocate, in this wise:

"Most worshipful sir, there be a conspiracy on the part of Simon Winter to ruin my client, that the said Winter may put away a rival. This man, who has a farm and much cattle and sheep, did propose to Farmer Manning for his daughter, a comely wench, and the proposal was accepted by Farmer Manning."

"Then came the prisoner and on the day he was of age danced merrily with Margaret Manning, and Simon Winter, being jealous, did hire men for pay to rob the church and place the plate in Edmond Koyle's barn, that he might make it appear that the sacrilege had been done by Koyle. Winter having the intent to injure Koyle that he should cease to be a rival for the hand of Margaret Manning."

"Therefore, I pray you, most worshipful sir, to let my client go free, or if you are not satisfied of his innocence he will willingly decide whether he or Winter is guilty of this sacrilege by deadly combat."

But Winter, being no match for a young man, declined the combat, and the judge was constrained to pronounce the accused guilty and pass sentence upon him.

Then did Margaret, who was in the court, fall down in a swoon and was carried to her father's house.

When the day came that Edmond Koyle was to be executed the people in those parts came to see some in wagons, some on foot and some on horseback, the women riding on pillows behind the men, so that a great crowd was collected. And there were present many friends of Koyle, who knew him to be innocent of the crime charged against him, and they murmured that he should be hanged for a crime he had not committed. Among the spectators sat Farmer Manning and his wife and between them Margaret, their daughter. And the people marveled greatly to see a maiden sitting by the scaffold on which the man she loved was to suffer death. But near her sat Montgomery, who had spoken in Koyle's behalf before the magistrate. All looked for Simon Winter, wondering mayhap if he would venture to attend the execution. But he dare not come, fearing the people.

Then came forth Edmond Koyle, being pale of countenance, but walking with a firm step and head erect. Before the cap was put over his face he stepped to the front of the scaffold and spoke the words which all who are condemned to die may at the last moment say to the people. But all he spoke was that he was innocent.

Then when the executioner was about to make ready for the hanging Montgomery looked at Margaret, and she, rising in her seat, said to the sheriff:

"I claim this man in marriage." The people marveled, and the sheriff, paying no heed to Margaret's demand, told the executioner to proceed. But up stands Montgomery and cries out with a loud voice:

"I protest against the execution as illegal."

"In what respect?" asks the sheriff. "There is an edict of our sovereign, King Edward IV., commanding that if a woman shall demand in marriage any man condemned to death he shall go free and be given to the woman."

And Montgomery took parchment to the sheriff and showed him the edict, and the sheriff read and ordered that the prisoner be given to Margaret.

Then all rose up and went to the church, consoled for not seeing a hanging by being given view of a wedding. But they were after all not satisfied without a hanging, and when Simon Winter came to see what was in the wind they made a rush for him, and, taking him to the scaffold, where all was in readiness for such a spectacle, they hanged him instead of his intended victim.

These things I have told not that I have heard them, but because I was present and saw them for myself.

COST OF ARMED PEACE.

We suffer from war and its horrors, but almost more from the cost of armed peace. Napoleon in the height of his power cost $2,000,000 a year on war. France today in peace spends $12,000,000. Happily there is a protest not only from the churches as never before, but from the labor unions and Socialists, spurred on by self interest. This may lead to the practical abolition of war.—President Schurman of Cornell.
