Humor and Philosophy

By DUNCAN H. SMITH

THE RELIEF.

LISTEN!
Do you hear the silence
Soft and low
As a hesitating beau,
Placid, calm, almost caressing,
Sweet, untroubled peace expressing
Have in spots
Where still it clashes
Like the noise of falling ashes
Or the constant chug and clatter
Of a trolley crossing train?
Well, this silence, you have noted,
And the best thing ever voted,
Is the absence and omission
Of the busy fall campaign.
Have in spots,
As has been mentioned heretofore,
Some few states are in a roar,
But the most of them are resting.
For the peat has ceased its peeing,
And there's quiet in the land.
Furled completely is the band.
Ain't it grand?
How we pity
State or city
In our witty,
Modest way,
Where they listen to the spouting
Of the speakers who are touting
Candidates the livelong day
And at night have on display
Oratory, slushed for fair,
That the unoffending air
Must absorb!
Voting sometimes has its uses,
But we offer no excuses
For our meritment at being
Candidates to make them swear
They will not the collar wear
Of a crooked corporation,
But will boost this little nation.
Next year we will all get busy
Over measures vague and dizzy.
This year, if your honor pleases,
We will rest.

Not an Incident.
"How is his new magazine getting along?"
"Oh, splendidly. He has an article for next month tearing the trust to tatters, another telling the president what to do and a third one roasting the tariff."
"But is it paying expenses?"
"Paying expenses? Of course not. He has no time for side issues."

Knew It Was Useless.
"I don't take much stock in these holdups. I have been out at all hours of the night and no one ever held me up."
"Some holdup men must be mind readers."

Mean Name.
"Mame!"
"Yes."
"Charlie tried to kiss me Sunday night."
"Did he succeed?"
"No."
"I wondered why you were riding with Tom last night."

His Opinion.
Took him to see her, the fairest of fair—
He was my chum, by the way—
Asked what he thought of her, now on the square.
When we had broken away.
"So she has promised to wed you, old chum."
Well, if you will not be teased
Here is the way my opinion to sum:
Gee, but she's easily pleased!"

His Limit.
"He smokes the cheapest cigars on the market."
"Why does he do that?"
"Because there are no cheaper ones."

Imagination.
Some men can rise to heights sublime,
Financially expressed,
If they can only feel a dime
Reposing in their vest.

Hard to Determine.
"I hear the Blacks have a new baby."
"I didn't know whether it was a new baby or a new graphophone record."

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

An overweening opinion of our own abilities answers a lot of times in the lieu of courage.

It is apt to matter when we reach the mental state that nothing we may do matters.

A stitch in time often prevents a rent in diplomatic relations.

The fellow who is compelled to jolly everybody seldom feels jolly himself.

Because you can talk is no reason why you should spend all the time exercising your tongue.

One reason why most of us long so inexpressibly to be rich is simply because we are poor.

The people who make fools of themselves are seldom hard laborers at the fool making trade.

The person who is short on cash and experience is very seldom long on industry.

One way of getting disappointed is by showing a friend where he has made an error and expecting to be thanked for your trouble.

Pride goes before a fall, and the merry ha-ha comes after.
