The planking of the county road between Marshfield and North Bend is being done without the use of spikes. Heretofore, after the stringers were set in the roadbed, the planks were spiked to them, but it has been demonstrated, so it is said, that the laying of planks without the use of spikes is the better way. No harm to try it, anyhow, and if the new way is not successful, we can always fall back on the old style. —Coos Bay News.

The Coos Bay News of Jan. 29, 1912, says: "C. S. Higgins, of Coos River, sent us two turnips, the united weight is between 40 and 50 pounds. They are a fine flavored table turnip tender and not pithy as turnips of such an enormous growth might be expected to be. They are said to be an average of an acre." The e must have been some turnips all right and the fact goes to show that Coos county is and always has been mighty productive.

One of the leading social events of the season was the progressive whist party given by Mrs. C. Timmons at her home Wednesday evening. The home was beautifully decorated for the occasion thus adding greatly to the charm of the evening's entertainment. There were about seventy guests present all of whom enjoyed the evening to the fullest extent. The first prize for ladies was won by Mrs. Frank Timmons while Miss Maud Lowe took the consolation prize. On the gentlemen's side of the house there were ties for both prizes. F. L. Greencough and A. G. Thrift tied for high prize and C. R. Moore and T. W. Robison tied for low prize. In the draws, Messrs Thrift and Robison were the winners and secured the prizes. Dainty refreshments were served and the entire evening was one of the most pleasant ever spent by people of Bandon.

It is believed that President Taft's message urging economy will have a marked effect. He declares that people are as much concerned in how the Government each year spends $1,000,000,000 as how that money is obtained. His proposal to place all offices under the civil service is a radical departure and would make the merit system of general operation. It would, so he declares, secure economy and efficiency. The matter of patronage now takes up a large part of the time of the President and of Congress. Dealing with the economy and efficiency commission he declares that many millions have been saved and much more will be saved through its work. He asks for additional appropriations of $20,000 to continue the work. At an expenditure up to date of $130,000, over $2,000,000 has been saved the people. Dealing with the question of expenses the President showed that some departments handling mail pay $5.84 for services that others pay $69.89 for, and one or the other must be out of just proportion. The cost of travel each year for the Government is $12,000,000. This item could be cut and labor machinery introduced, besides cutting off needless expense for public documents—all matters calculated to reduce public expenses. A budget system is advised, the United States being the only government that does not use this to keep down expenses. Retirement of employees on an old age pension system is also advised.

Mr. D. B. S. Reid, of Heppner, Oregon, has been visiting Curry county during the past week, looking up our resources, our harbor and our climate. Mr. Reid is surveyor of Morrow county, and will give a good word for us to whomsoever he may meet. He was especially pleased with our harbor, and our matchless climate so different from Eastern Oregon. Mr. Reid says there are a number of people in the interior who are looking for homes along the coast, and that this summer will see many of them on the move, especially toward Port Orford and vicinity. —Port Orford Tribune.

ELECTRIC TERMS.

The Units of Measurement and What They Mean.

AMPERES, VOLTS AND WATTS.

Broadly Speaking, Amperes Indicate Volume, Volts Measure Pressure and Watts Show the Resulting Quantity. The Kilowatt Hour.

It has been estimated that the time and labor wasted by those engaged in selling electricity in trying to make their customers understand a kilowatt would suffice to build a string of pyramids from New York to San Francisco, writes Allen Hollis. The discouraging feature of the task is that after all this effort the customer still remains ignorant and cherishes the delusion that the method of electric measurement is a devious device for concealing nefarious practices by the electric light companies.

The average American is perfectly satisfied to buy gas by the foot, transportation by the mile and telephones by the month, but watts look suspicious and kilowatts totally depraved. This difficulty might have been avoided if the eminent scientists who first adopted these accurate and to them convenient terms had been willing to show the rest of the world how to compute electric quantity in feet and inches or barrels and quarts. Lacking this, people are left to struggle with their mysterious method of measurements.

The kilo is an old friend or ancient enemy, if you will borrowed from the metric system.

This leads to the definition of a watt. But in order to know watts one must first learn about the two other members of the family, amperes and volts. Broadly speaking, amperes measure volume, volts pressure and watts the resulting quantity.

In order to get a tangible idea of the ampere, electricity may be compared with water flowing through a pipe. In this illustration the ampere will represent the volume of water, which is determined by the size of the pipe, but this should not be confused with the size of the electric wire, which has nothing to do with the present problem. The ampere then measures the volume of current flowing in the wire at a given time. The quantity of energy flowing will depend upon the other factor, which is expressed in volts.

The volt may be considered the measure of pressure or intensity. In the illustration of water flowing through a pipe the pressure is commonly expressed in pounds to the square inch. With electric energy the same idea is expressed in volts. It is evident that the quantity of water flowing in a pipe of a given size will increase as the pressure increases. In a similar way the quantity of electricity increases in exact proportion to the electric pressure of voltage, and this quantity is measured by watts.

The quantity (watts) of electricity delivered over a single circuit is the direct product of the volume (amperes) multiplied by the pressure (volts). In other words, amperes multiplied by volts equals watts.

The illustration serves to indicate the theory of electric measurement. It is likely, however, to be misleading unless the fact is kept in mind that water is material, while electricity manifests itself only through its capacity of affecting visible things. It heats the filament in an incandescent lamp and gives us light. It turns our motors, it magnetizes telephone and telegraph instruments, but always it conceals its own personality.

In order to know what a watt actually is it is necessary to ascertain what it will do. A thousand (kilo) watts are the mechanical equivalent of one and one-third horsepower—that is, a mechanical horsepower equals 746 watts of energy. Lighting circuits usually carry 110 to 120 volts. An ordinary sixteen candle power lamp takes a little less than half an ampere in volume and consequently consumes about fifty watts of current. With the tungsten lamp the rating by watts instead of candle power has been introduced and bids fair to become universally adopted.

Being thus furnished with a standard of measurement it is necessary only to multiply the amount employed (commonly called "capacity") by the number of hours of use to get the actual quantity consumed in watt hours. The sixteen candle power lamp, with its fifty watts capacity, consumes fifty watt hours each hour it is used. The customary unit of consumption is the kilowatt hour, (1,000 watts used one hour, and the lamp will consume this quantity in twenty hours. The ordinary electric meter recording watt meters records automatically the number of kilowatt hours used, being operated by a mechanism which runs at a speed which corresponds to the capacity employed.—Rollins' Magazine.

Bismarck and No. 3.
Bismarck held that three was the perfect number, for he had served three masters, he had three names, three oak leaves figure in his family arms, he was concerned in three wars, he signed three treaties of peace, in the Franco-Prussian war he had three horses killed under him, he brought about the meeting of three emperors, he was responsible for the triple alliance, he had three children, his family motto was "Strength in trinity," and caricaturists depicted him with three hairs on his head.
