JUSTICE TO THE ARABS.

It is unfortunate for the Arabians that their literature should be locked up in a character and idiom so difficult of access to European scholars. Their wild, imaginative poetry, scarcely capable of transference into a foreign tongue, is made known to us only through the medium of bad prose translation, while their scientific treatises have been done into Latin with an inaccuracy which, to make use of a pun of Casiri's, merits the name of perversions rather than versions of the originals. How obviously inadequate, then, are our means of forming any just estimate of their merits! It is unfortunate for them, moreover, that the Turks (the only nation which, from an identity of religion and government with the Arabs, as well as from its political consequence, would seem to represent them on the theater of modern Europe) should be a race so degraded, one which, during the five centuries it has been in possession of the finest climate and monuments of antiquity, has so seldom been quickened into a display of genius or added a little of positive value to the literary treasures descended from its ancient masters. Yet this people, so sensual and sluggish, we are apt to confound in imagination with the sprightly, intellectual Arab.—Prescott.
