Eastern Star Natal Day.

Occidental Chapter No. 45, O. E. S. went to Marshfield in large numbers last Friday and Saturday, to be in attendance at the convention of the Coos County Natal Day Association. The convention was very largely attended, the lodge having many representatives from Coquille, Bandon, North Bend, Myrtle Point, Rosburg and Marshfield. To the town having the largest percentage of its members present at the convention, a large and beautiful silver loving cup was promised, North Bend winning the trophy with the record of 52 representatives out of a membership of 70. The Coos Chapter No. 99 was heartily congratulated on her well deserved success.

The lodge room was profusely decorated with flowers of all kinds and evergreens. In the foremost part of the room in a large brass jardiner were some white lilies which were said by many to be the most beautiful of their kind ever exhibited in Marshfield. They were a contribution of Mrs. Norris Jensen of that city, she having raised them in her own garden. The reception room was prettily decorated with large bowls of fuschias.

The banquet room with its long rows of heavily laden tables, its beautiful floral decorations and soft illumination of many candles presented a picture that will long live in the minds of the 300 guests present.

The next annual convention is to be held at Bandon as near the 31st of August as possible.

The following officers for this convention were elected:

Mrs. Steve Gallier, president; Mr. Ira Sidwell, vice president; Mrs. Bingamam, secretary.

The Bandon lodge put on the degree work Friday night and was very highly complimented upon the manner in which the work was done.

AFTER CURRY LIQUOR MEN

Judge J. S. Coke Imposes Fines and Punishment in Several Cases.

Liquor men of Curry County were made to pay the expenses of this term of court and then some profit, after being punished for violations of the liquor laws.

Judge John S. Coke returned from Gold Beach today after having held a three-day session of the circuit court. He came back in the auto with Court Reporter Riddle. There were not many civil cases and only one civil case was tried before a jury.

O. P. Haageson, who conducts a saloon at Langlois, was up to answer several charges. There were two indictments against him for selling liquor to minors and one charge of allowing gambling in his place. He holds a regular license in Langlois. On the charge of allowing gambling and on one of the charges of selling to minors he was fined $200 and costs in each case. On the other charge of selling liquor to minors he was fined $300 and costs and sentenced to one year in jail but was paroled on the conditions that he conduct his business in a law abiding manner.

Another saloon man up was Peter Johnson, who had a license to sell liquor at Langlois. He was charged with selling liquor to minors. He was fined $200 and costs. He paid up and said that he would quit the business and go back to ranching.

There was also an indictment against a man named Owen who conducted a saloon at Gold Beach. The place turned down and since then Owen secured a government license to dispose of his liquor in quantities of a gallon or more. The state law does not permit of gallon selling any more, although the man had a government license. The grand jury recommended that they believed that the man thought he was working legally and therefore asked that the court give him consideration. He was fined $400 and paroled on account of the request of the grand jury.—Coos Bay Times.

Plans have matured in the last few days whereby Gold Beach will have a furniture and hardware store. A gentleman from Douglas county by the name of P. M. Littler together with his wife has been looking for a business location along the coast and have decided to cast their lot in Gold Beach and will bring in a stock of furniture and hardware as soon as a suitable building can be built. Mr. Littler has secured a location near the court house for the store and aside from the store will build two small bungalows at once, one of which will be occupied by his mother who is provided for by Mr. Littler.—Gold Beach Globe.

General Booth's funeral was an international function. The magistrates of the world did homage to his memory and the peoples joined to revere him. When he began his work he was reviled and persecuted. His officers were jailed for preaching the gospel to the poor. But he went on doing good, not for the sake of money and renown, but because he loved his fellow men. He sought first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness and everything else that the world craves was added unto him. Few men have lived more usefully or died in greater honor.

DIVIDENDS FROM SCHOOLS

Since the basis of a nation's power is good health in its population every means should be employed to enlighten our youth regarding the constitution of the body and the fundamental laws of health. Our high schools should yield us a strong and temperate contingent. They should bring into society a taste for good reading and a love for scholarship and good literature. They should see the vulgarity in the prevailing adoration of luxury and should be taught the genuine beauty of "the simple life." No pains should be spared to save them from the cowardly depression so often resulting from "ill luck" and leading to dissipation and even self destruction. The inevitableness of trouble and the duty of bravery should be impressed upon them. Certain minor requirements should reasonably be made of them. They should be able to write a presentable and sensible letter; should have quiet and refined manners in public and pleasant voices. Above all, they should have the spirit of progress.—Kate Upson Clark.

Governor Cole Blaise of South Carolina says that Colonel Bamberg, who is on his staff, "is the one colonel I have never seen full." The governor must have peculiar acquaintances. To paraphrase the remark of another Carolina governor, "It is a long time between sober colonels."

The restoration of peace in the Mexican state of Tabasco is reported. This certainly ends the revolution. When there is no trouble in Tabasco all the rest of the country must perforce be at peace.

They do come back. Who? The vacationers.

Appealing to the Law.

There is a story of a Chicago boy that might be taken to heart by older people. This lad is only seven and has the common name of Johnnie Smith, but gained some degree of fame for a simple act. Johnnie and his companions were playing in the street, the only playground they had in the part of Chicago where they live. A Mrs. Briscoe objected to the noise of the youngsters and, opening a window, doused them with dirty water.

Most youngsters would have gotten even by throwing rocks at the window or annoying the woman in some similar way. Not so Johnnie. Though only a mite of humanity, he marched manfully over to the police station and demanded that Mrs. Briscoe be "pinned." His companions were too timid to enter the station with him, but Johnnie Smith never quailed. He made his complaint in proper form and got action. As a result it is safe to say that neither Mrs. Briscoe nor others in that neighborhood will again interfere with the rights of little boys to have a playground.

In a quarter there is a prejudice against those who appeal to the law, but on analysis this will be found to rest either on a misunderstanding or viciousness. When the rights of the individual are invaded, why should he not appeal to the law? That is what the law is for. He owes it not only to himself to make such appeal, but to society. It is not a privilege alone, but a duty, and both an individual and a social duty. If there were more of such appeals to the law there would be less lawlessness. We need more Johnnie Smiths.

"Bridge" Webber, one of the men arrested for the murder of Rosenthal in New York, says that if he gets out of this scrape he will devote the remainder of his life to reforming gamblers. He is not the first man to resolve on reform the moment he got into trouble.
