A UNIQUE CLOCK

By ALLAN G. LAMOND

It was past midnight when Guzzoli and Tarantola, two men who, having worked their natural Italian field quite long enough, had come to America for a new one, pried up a window sash on the ground floor of a handsome stone front residence with a jimmy and entered the drawing room. There was nothing in this apartment that they could conveniently carry away except a small clock that stood on the mantel. But it was a gem. Indeed, it was set with a number of gems. It would make any fancier of beautiful things in love with it at once.

"I want that," said Guzzoli, who had some of the taste for attractive workmanship of his race.

"Let it alone," interposed Tarantola. "You can never turn it into money with safety. It's just the thing to identify any one who takes it. Let's go in and see if we can find any silver that can be melted down, or if we dare go upstairs we may find jewels."

"If I can't do any better," replied the other, "I can get the jewels out of this one. I'm going to take it."

"Well, wait till we've been through the house. It may strike the hour while you're near some of the family and awaken them."

So the men went into the dining room, where they found that all the silver belonging to the family in use had been left in the sideboard. Guzzoli held open the mouth of a bag while Tarantola stuffed the articles in; then, leaving the plunder on the dining room table, they took off their shoes and went upstairs, separating on the landing to explore different rooms.

Both men were successful. Tarantola entered a bedroom where a young girl was sleeping soundly and succeeded in gathering a number of rings, bracelets and brooches from a dresser without awakening her. He was so encouraged by his haul that he concluded to go farther.

Guzzoli found some valuable trinkets for which he had a fancy, and, being satisfied to let wolf enough alone, he slipped downstairs and made for the drawing room to secure the clock he coveted. Taking it from the mantel, he stuffed it in the side pocket of his coat and went into the dining room, where the silver had been left. He was looking about to see if some articles had not been overlooked and had just picked up a butter dish when he heard a voice, which seemed to be right under his elbow:

"Drop that!"

The plate rattled on the floor, and Guzzoli's heart was beating like a trip-hammer. Tarantola upstairs heard the sound of the falling metal and beat a hasty retreat. Entering the dining room, he accosted his pal in a hoarse whisper:

"What do you mean by your careless mess?"

"There's some one here," gasped Guzzoli, clutching at his pal's hand in terror.

"You're scared out of your wits," said the other. "Come; we've finished the job. Let's get out."

Tarantola, leaving Guzzoli, went to the table and took up the bag of silver and threw it over his shoulder. He was starting to pass through the drawing room when again came the voice:

"Drop that!"

He managed to retain sufficient control of himself not to let the heavy weight down on the floor with a thump, but he lowered it at once and, grasping a revolver, stood ready for defense. Since the men had worked only by a hand electric flash lamp the room was dark except for what light could get in through the drawing room windows from the street.

Both men remained perfectly still for a moment, expecting to be shot down by some one under cover of the darkness. Having remained so for some time, since nothing happened, Tarantola, though he knew he had not been mistaken in hearing the words, was about to take up the sack when he heard a voice say, "Have you got everything?"

Meanwhile, the head of the house had been awakened by the fall of the silver plate and, getting out of bed, had gone to the banister and stood listening. He heard persons whispering and moving below and, darting to the telephone booth, carefully shut the door and called the police. Then he went back to continue his listening, arriving at his post immediately after the question asked by the voice. He heard some one say:

"Shut up!"

"It isn't me talking. There's some one beside me all the time."

Then there was a cry of "Police!" The men dropped everything and made for the window through which they had come. They got safely out and started down the street, but ran right into the arms of the police who were coming in response to the telephone call. They were taken back to the house, and all the articles they had stolen were found on them except the silverware.

When the little clock was taken out of Guzzoli's pocket, a voice, which unmistakably came from its special time.

"Police! Robbers! Come quick!" The secret was out for all. Inside the case, instead of the works of an ordinary clock, was a phonograph which only needed to be moved that the machinery be set going. Then at intervals a voice which had been talked into it by its owner would repeat what he had said.

MOTHER'S TEACHING.

I think back through the years, the lean and fat, the good and the bad ones, to my earliest recollection. I see a woman with an eye that flashes swift as an archangel's wing and a mouth that breaks with laughter and hardens at sight of wrong, singing lullabies; a woman who, with hand grasping the unseen "Hand," walks the brier bordered paths of life unashamed, unafraid, unharmed. She is clad in garments of beauty for me, and age does not soil them nor years make them cheap and tawdry. Her tongue is without guile, having never been the messenger of a lie. It is seventeen years since her soul went home to God and her fingers became for me the fingers of an angel, but I have not forgotten all she said. She told me there was a Santa Claus, and I believe her. He brings me no longer drums and files, but he still brings to me the vision of my mother and the music of that angelic chorus which sang at creation's dawn and at the hour of man's redemption.—Governor Thomas R. Marshall.

BIRTH AND DEATH.

On parents' knees a naked, newborn child,
Weeping, then silent when all around thee smiled,
So live that, sinking in thy last long sleep,
Thou then mayest smile white all around thee weep.
—Caldessa (Dr. William Jones' Translation).

THE WAY TO SUCCESS.

No matter what a man's education may be—however great his acquired subtlety of reasoning, his cleverness of expression or his seductive mastery of language—unless he have the ordinary virtues of uprightness of life and conscience, sympathy of heart, his work must at the best be ephemeral and at the worst evil. The foundation, therefore, of education is character, and the only effective expression of education must be self reliance tempered by humility and dedicated to service. As children of a common Father we all must admit a common dependence upon an unseen and, perhaps forever, an inexplicable power. But in our hearts each of us feels an equally inexplicable impulse to individual and unique achievement. Whether conscious to ourselves and appreciated by ourselves or whether only blindly dominating, this impulse orders us forward to service. Education lights the way and determines the destination. Humanity must and shall be served no matter who may suffer. That is both the whip and the hope of the race.—Governor John A. Dix of New York.

British Army Red Tapp.

A letter of instruction said to have been sent to a British army officer, who reported that Private Blank had lost his greencout, runs as follows: "The calculation of the value of a lost greencout should be made by deducting the value when worn out from the value when new, as given in article 75, 1845, clothing warrant, dividing the remainder by the number of months the garment should wear, multiplying the quotient by the number of months the garment has actually been worn and subtracting the sum thus obtained from the total value of the new greencout. The balance is the amount that should be charged."

The Ohio River.

No part of the Ohio River is in Ohio, the boundary of the state being the northern or northwestern margin of the river. The stream itself is wholly in West Virginia and Kentucky, where it flows past Ohio. The northwestern territory, out of which Ohio was formed, was defined as the territory north and west of the Ohio, not north and west of the middle of that great river

Doctors Use This for Eczema

Dr. Evans, Ex-Commissioner of Health, says: "There is almost no relation between skin diseases and the blood." The skin must be cured through the skin. The germs must be washed out, and so salves have long ago been found worthless. The most advanced physicians of this country are now agreed on this, and are prescribing a wash of wintergreen, thymol and other ingredients for eczema and all other skin diseases. This compound is known as D.D.D. Prescription for Eczema.

Dr. Holman, the well known skin specialist writes: "I am convinced that the D.D.D. Prescription is as much a specific for eczema as quinine for malaria. We have been prescribing the D.D.D. remedy for years.

We, ourselves vouch for the D.D.D.
