Could Shout For Joy.

"I want to thank you from the bottom of my heart," wrote C. B. Rader, of Lewisburg, W. Va., "for the wonderful double benefit I got from Electric Bitters, of curing me of both a severe case of stomach trouble and rheumatism, from which I had been an almost helpless sufferer for ten years. It suited my case as though made just for me." For dyspepsia, indigestion, jaundice, and to rid the system of kidney poisons that cause rheumatism, Electric Bitters have no superior. Try them. Every bottle is guaranteed to satisfy. Only 50 cents at all druggists.

Railroad Contractors Are Busy.

C. H. Marsh, right of way agent for the S. P., is authority for the statement that Copenhagen Bros. contractors have received at Gardiner a long delayed shipment of heavy grading equipment. The shipment was delayed on account of rough weather. It consists of one 70 ton steam shovel 19 5 ton cars and track-laying. The railroad work has caused new life in Gardiner.

W. H. Kibler of Point Terrace is here this week and he says that he did not see anything of the steam shovel or other equipment.—Coos Bay Harbor.

Wall Street Deals Probed.

New York, Dec. 6.—Representatives of the House committee are at work in this city preparing for a resumption of their investigation of the "money trust" in Washington next Monday. The latest phase of the commission's activity is the operation of the New York Stock Exchange companies acting as transfer agents for large corporations whose shares are heavily dealt in on the exchange. They have been visited the last few days by a committee of statisticians to inquire into figures showing the number of shares of such corporations actually transferred within the given periods.

It is well known that the amount of stock of some of the market leaders and the trading in it within a year is much larger than the local capitalization, so that on the face of it returns the ownership of all the shares changes hands several times during that period.

Dundam for Customs Collector.

Harkness W. Dunham, the local pilot and steamboat man, is in line for political honors at the hands of the newly elected president of the United States. Mr. Dunham has been proposed by his friends for the office of Collector of Customs at the port of Empire and it is thought it very probable by his many friends here and in the county that he will receive the appointment without opposition. He has been a staunch Democrat all his life so far as history goes and this is the first time he has ever been proposed for any political or prominent public office. Hark says he is not "working" for the appointment but that his friends proposed his name and he will accept if appointed.—Coquille Sentinel.

Many Voters Write They Were Mixed on Issue.

As the time for the execution of the five men condemned to be hanged December 13 approaches, Governor West is receiving dozens of letters from voters in the state who say they misunderstood the form in which the question of abolishing capital punishment was put on the ballot and that they therefore voted wrong. They say that they voted no, thinking that would be a vote against hanging, when in fact it was a vote to retain hanging. "Many are asking the governor to give the people another chance to vote on the question before the men are executed" said R. L. Watson, private secretary to the governor. "To prove that the people of the state didn't understand the question as put on the ballot and that the sentiment of the state is in favor of abolishing hanging, some have suggested that a newspaper vote be taken, and that the papers put the question plainly: For hanging, Yes; against hanging, No."—Coos Bay Harbor.

Saved In the Nick of Time

By RUTH W. MALTBY

The early settlers in Kentucky came largely from the same direction. Reaching America from the old world, they settled in Pennsylvania, later emigrated to western Virginia and, having worked out their lands there, moved on down the Ohio river to appropriate the virgin soil of Kentucky.

Among these movers was a family named Martin, the father and mother being elderly persons, their elder children grown. A daughter, Hester, was a girl of eighteen. They settled not far from where Bowling Green is now situated.

The war of 1812 was being fought, and soon after the arrival of the Martins in their new home the battle of New Orleans was fought and won by the Americans, or, rather, the woods men of the west, among whom the hunters of Kentucky were conspicuous. The war had been ended by treaty before the battle, though the news of peace had not yet got across the Atlantic, and soon after it was over the troops came marching home.

A company of Kentuckians recruited from the region about where the Martins lived was disbanded, and a young man, Almer Armstrong, who had marched away and returned as a lieutenant, was among the number. At the time of his appearance John Bartlett, a man of forty years of age, had asked Martin for his daughter Hester's hand. There were many months to feed in Martin's family, and Bartlett was the only suitor who had established himself in the new country; therefore Martin persuaded Hester to marry him.

But before the wedding had taken place along came the soldiers whose rifles had won the battle of New Orleans. Young Armstrong was a strapping, flaxen haired, blue eyed boy with every appearance of manliness, but without an engaging smile. Hester looked at him and surrendered.

There is but little reason in youth. Instead of confessing to her father and her betrothed that she had not known what love was and that, having discovered it in the young soldier, she had changed, Hester resolved on the most desperate course to be conceived of. She told Armstrong, who was as deeply smitten with her as she was with him, that she could never face either her father or her betrothed to tell them of the change in her and the only course left for them was to run away. It was not likely that one who had but recently helped to win a battle should show the white feather.

The only means of conveyance in those days in Kentucky was a horse. Armstrong had but one animal, but it served for both. They started on an afternoon, and their flight was discovered about 9 o'clock the same night. Bartlett was notified, and when he learned how he had been treated he said:

"I'll go after 'em and bring 'em back. Then I'll tell 'em they kin get married for all me as soon as they like."

With this he mounted his horse, his rifle slung to his saddle and pistols in his holster, for no one went about unarmed in those wild days, and, assuming that the fugitives would make for the Ohio river, he rode straight northward. About midnight he saw a lurid light on the clouds to the northeast, and, thinking the fugitives had bivouacked and built a fire, he turned his horse's head in that direction.

Suddenly he reined in to a stand and listened. A distant confused barking fell upon his ear. He shuddered. A picture came before his mind's eye painted by the hand of experience. A Kentuckian, he knew that the barks he heard were those of wolves and that one of the ways of fighting wolves was by fire. He saw the girl he had hoped to make his wife and the man she had eloped with besieged by hungry beasts.

Urging forward his horse, guided by the light, the barks growing more distinct as he approached, he finally burst in upon the very scene he had pictured. Armstrong and Hester occupied the center of a circle of fire they had built to keep off the pack. Armstrong's ammunition had been expended, and whenever a wolf snarled too close he beat it back with the barrel of his rifle or with a burning brand. Hester, like a true daughter of the forest, was bravely arranging the wood they had gathered to keep it burning.

Having ridden as far as his terrified horse would go, Bartlett dismounted and, aiming at a wolf, shot him dead. Then, while the pack were devouring their companion, the rifle was reloaded and another wolf was brought down. Drawing nearer to the besieged couple, Bartlett called upon them to run toward him while he covered their retreat. They started, Hester in advance. The wolves sprang after them, and just as their leader was about to spring upon Armstrong, who was moving with his face to them, Bartlett shot the beast dead. This gave Armstrong time to make good his retreat, and before the wolves had finished eating the carcass already slain the three persons had got away.

The next morning all appeared at the Martin home. Bartlett, without a word of reproach, released Hester from her engagement to him, and her father consented to her marriage with Armstrong as soon as he had a cabin to put her in. But the latter proved a better soldier than pioneer and never got the cabin. In time Hester married Bartlett of her own free will.
