FRIDAY December 20 1912

Regent Luitpold of Bavaria is dead and the mad king Otto reigns. Otto is confined in his castle at Fursteneid. He is hopelessly insane and imagines he is an animal and spends his time building mud houses. Yet this mad man reigns king of all Bavaria which shows the uselessness of kings. Otto should be dethroned and placed in an asylum. The public sentiment which keeps this maniac on the throne is a sickening superstition of the ignorant past and is unworthy of present civilization. The time is fast approaching when all kings will be utterly despised and when no self respecting nation will suffer a king, sane or insane to rule.

A Bandon business man says: "I could have only seen the future five years ago I would have secured enough of this worthless dirt to now be independent." Same opportunities exist now, even better if we could see the future.

And now the Attorney General declares the woman cannot sit on the jury. The Recorder suggests that this man needs setting down on his back and it is up to the woman to do it.

Bandon has two of the best moving picture shows in the west. We have had opportunity to see different shows throughout the western half of the United States. Bandon's picture shows are hard to beat.

Spiritual food is supposed to develop moral culture and in consequence righteousness and peace. However, a hunk of bread and meat once in a while will help some.

Miss Hughes thinks about four teen pupils will graduate from the 8th grade into High school the first of the year.

A little more care in forming the character would lessen the work of reform.

J. Frank, Hickey has confessed that he murdered two little boys. We don't know about his hair but we notice he parts his name in the middle.

The girl who is found in the graduating class will be found at home at night.

Your ten year old boy was probably lost in modern geography. We get lost even in Coos County.

Unless you are a lawyer splitting hairs is a waste of time.

Having no income, we favor an income tax.

You can buy it in Bandon for Christmas.

Unearned honors are as hard to keep as stolen money.

Hell is discord and there is lots of it.

Anyone can run a newspaper or run the government.

We have a theory that the high tempered woman who talks wrinkles into her face and then tries to obliterate them with a paint brush is working against herself.

Elbert Dyer says he has a suspicion that the principal reason why the bridge at Seeley & Anderson's logging camp fell down was because it was too weak to stand up.

The man who posts a bill is not necessarily posted to talk on public questions.

Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, the famous suffragette, now insists that women wear trousers instead of skirts. What kind of a Catt is Carrie anyhow?

A lot of politicians who have said bad things about Bryan consider it bad policy to appoint him in the cabinet.

Some natures must either land or lambast; there is no middle ground. Neither extreme is fair and each is worse than the other.

Every man has a right to one woman—if she wants him.

The man who deals with the public learns to take insults along with the money.

The most tiresome thing in the world is silly talk; and there is the most of it.

The boy who can run an engine ten hours beats the fellow who can run 100 yards in ten seconds.

The Recorder stands for women's rights but when a woman blacks her husband's eye that is carrying the thing too far.

A Bandon woman who says she can't trust her husband, ran him in debt at the millinery store. Now why should the milliner do it?

England and Germany are again going to fight, in the newspapers.

Whitelaw Reid Passes Away.

London, Dec. 16—Memorial services for the late Ambassador Reid will be held Wednesday or Thursday of this week and unless the British government offers a conveyance for the body to the United States it will be sent to America, either on board the Campania, from Liverpool next Saturday, or on the Laurentic, leaving December 24. At the British foreign office today the greatest regret was expressed over the death of the ambassador. Secretary Edward Grey, foreign minister, has already sent a cable to James Bryce, the British ambassador at Washington, of the condolence of the British government.

Whitelaw Reid was the owner of the New York Tribune, a large stockholder in the Morgenshuler Linotype Co. His wife was the daughter of D. C. Mills, the late San Francisco millionaire.

The British government had proposed to the United States that a British battleship should convey the body of Whitelaw Reid to his native land. Premier Asquith's decision was presented formally to the House of Commons today. He paid a graceful tribute to the dead diplomat. It has been arranged to hold memorial services in Westminster Abbey at noon Friday.

During the month of November there were 98 local books read in the public library and 62 of the state traveling library, 160 altogether, and a large number of magazines and newspapers were also read, of which no account was kept. The first library that was sent here by the state is being returned and a new one will be here soon.—Mrs. Lockwood, Librarian.

Better steamer service on the upper Columbia and the Snake rivers was the subject taken up by a conference of commercial club representatives at Kennewick. Plans were made for the operation of boats during the coming year and resolutions adopted that the organizations represented should assist in every way the steamboat companies operating on these streams.

Commercial bodies of the Willamette Valley will, it is said by Government officials, be obliged to show more interest in the proposed improvement of the channel of the Willamette River before federal engineers will be ready to go ahead with the deepening of the stream to six feet at all points as far south as Eugene. Local co-operation is awaited.
