Do You Want a Public Library for Bandon?

Would a public library be a benefit to our citizenship?

Such a query would never receive anything but an affirmative answer given any sane person, and only an affirmative and zealous answer from one who appreciates the value of an extensive library accessible to a large number of people of diverse literary tendencies and aspirations.

An informed people, citizenship or populace cannot be else than a progressive people. Ignorance begets slothfulness and slothfulness is a bar to advancement commercially, intellectually and in every way that affects the social well of a community. Ignorance breeds viciousness.

Why do we often hear of some mean and contemptible act of some of our people, some we meet every day on the street? Because of their lack of information because of their limited mental horizon which needs lifting by a good strong breath of real vital life that comes from across the divide through the medium of current literature and history.

Let the Commercial club consider the advisability of assisting in the matter of establishing a library that will be commensurate with the needs of our city and will incite our people to higher and better things.

We positively cannot better our condition materially or financially without improving the condition of our brain. Darken the windows of the soul and trees will grow in your path. Beginning Jan. 8th a vigorous campaign will be inaugurated for the establishment of a library suitable to our needs. If you are interested please communicate with Supt. H. L. Hopkins, or Rev. S. R. Steele so that these men that are trying to advance the work may be encouraged by your manifestation of interest.

They are ready to place on the library tables the popular magazines, if you donate to the library a subscription to same, also the book committee is ready to receive donations of books or of money for buying books. This can be left at the Bandon Drug Co. in care of Mr. Crain or at the library at night.

Reference books will be purchased and a strong list of current magazines and daily newspapers will be on the files of the library at no late day.—S. R. Steele,

Saved In the Nick of Time

By RUTH W. MALTBY

The early settlers in Kentucky came largely from the same direction. Reaching America from the old world, they settled in Pennsylvania, later emigrated to western Virginia and, having worked out their lands there, moved on down the Ohio river to appropriate the virgin soil of Kentucky.

Among these movers was a family named Martin, the father and mother being elderly persons, their elder children grown. A daughter, Hester, was a girl of eighteen. They settled not far from where Bowling Green is now situated.

The war of 1812 was being fought, and soon after the arrival of the Martins in their new home the battle of New Orleans was fought and won by the Americans, or, rather, the woods men of the west, among whom the hunters of Kentucky were conspicuous. The war had been ended by treaty before the battle, though the news of peace had not yet crossed the Atlantic, and soon after it was over the troops came marching home.

A company of Kentuckians recruited from the region about where the Martins lived was disbanded, and a young man, Almer Armstrong, who had marched away and returned as a lieutenant, was among the number. At the time of his appearance John Bartlett, a man of forty years of age, had asked Martin for his daughter Hester's hand. There were many months to feed in Martin's family, and Bartlett was the only suitor who had established himself in the new country; therefore Martin persuaded Hester to marry him.

But before the wedding had taken place along came the soldiers whose rifles had won the battle of New Orleans. Young Armstrong was a strapping, buxom fellow, blue eyed boy with every appearance of manliness, but withal an engaging smile. Hester looked at him and surrendered.

There is but little reason in youth. Instead of confessing to her father and her betrothed that she had not known what love was and that, having discovered it in the young soldier, she had changed, Hester resolved on the most desperate course to be conceived of. She told Armstrong, who was as deeply smitten with her as she was with him, that she could never face either her father or her betrothed to tell them of the change in her and the only course left for them was to run away. It was not likely that one who had but recently helped to win a battle should show the white feather.

The only means of conveyance in those days in Kentucky was a horse. Armstrong had but one animal, but it served for both. They started on an afternoon, and their flight was discovered about 9 o'clock the same night. Bartlett was notified, and when he learned how he had been treated he said:

"I'll go after 'em and bring 'em back. Then I'll tell 'em they kin get married for all me as soon as they like."

With this he mounted his horse, his rifle slung to his saddle and pistols in his holster, for no one went about unarmed in those wild days, and, assuming that the fugitives would make for the Ohio river, he rode straight northward. About midnight he saw a lurid light on the clouds to the northeastward, and, thinking the fugitives had been caught and built a fire, he turned his horse's head in that direction.

Suddenly he reined in to a stand and listened. A distant confused barking fell upon his ear. He shuddered. A picture came before his mind's eye painted by the hand of experience. A Kentuckian, he knew that the barks he heard were those of wolves and that one of the ways of fighting wolves was by fire. He saw the girl he had hoped to make his wife and the man she had eloped with besieged by hungry beasts.

Grasping forward his horse, guided by the light, the barks growing more distinct as he approached, he finally burst in upon the very scene he had pictured. Armstrong and Hester occupied the center of a circle of fire they had built to keep off the pack. Armstrong's ammunition had been expended and whenever a wolf snarled too close he bent it back with the barrel of his rifle or with a burning brand. Hester, like a true daughter of the forest, was busily arranging the wood they had gathered to keep it burning.

Having ridden as far as his terrified horse would go, Bartlett dismounted and, slinging at a wolf, shot him dead. Then, while the pack were devouring their companion, the rifle was reloaded and another wolf was brought down. Drawing nearer to the besieged couple, Bartlett called upon them to run toward him while he covered their retreat. They started, Hester in advance. The wolves sprang after them, and just as their leader was about to spring upon Armstrong, who was moving with his face to them, Bartlett shot the beast dead. This gave Armstrong time to make good his retreat, and before the wolves had finished eating the carcass already slain the three persons had got away.

The next morning all appeared at the Martin home. Bartlett, without a word of reproach, released Hester from her engagement to him and her father consented to her marriage with Armstrong as soon as he had a cabin to put her in. But the latter proved a better soldier than pioneer and never got the cabin. In time Hester married Bartlett of her own free will.

A Hero in a Lighthouse.

For years J. S. Donahue, So. Haven, Mich., a civil war captain, as a lighthouse keeper, averted awful wrecks, but a queer fact is he might have been a wreck, himself, if Electric Bitters had not prevented. "They cured me of kidney trouble and chills," he writes, "after I had taken other so called cures for years, without benefit and they also improved my sight. Now, at seventy, I am feeling fine." For dyspepsia, indigestion, all stomach liver and kidney troubles, they're without equal. Try them. Only 50cts at all druggists.
