MINNESOTA MASTER.

A Progressive Farmer Now at the Helm in Minnesota.

The Minnesota state grange no longer has a lady as its master, as Mrs. Sarah G. Baird, who has been at the head of the Order for the past eighteen years, retired this year and is succeeded by Charles L. Rice, a wide awake, earnest Patron, from whose leadership much is expected.

State Master Rice is one of the best known farmers in Austin, Minn., as a breeder of thoroughbred Percheron horses, Hereford cattle, Shropshire sheep, Chester White hogs and Plymouth outh Rock poultry. Having been extensively engaged in this business, Mr. Rice's acquaintance among the farmers of Minnesota is very large, and his leadership is certain to be of pronounced character. He was the first master of Enterprise grange, organized three years ago. He was elected master of Mower County Pomona grange when it was organized last spring, and for two years he filled the office of state lecturer. Under his direction the state grange will be safely progressive and conservative and is sure to go forward along all worthy lines.

GREAT SESSION PROMISED.

Massachusetts Patrons Will Make Novel Exhibit in Boston.

The next session of the Massachusetts state grange is to be held at Boston, Dec. 9-11, this decision having been reached by unanimous vote of the executive committee. Tremont Temple has been engaged for the three days, one of the most beautiful assembly halls in New England, and headquarters arrangements have been made at the United States hotel, while liberal accommodations for delegates will be made at other hotels. An attendance of fully 3,000 grange members is expected at this annual session.

In connection therewith an interesting feature will be carried out, which is certain to have the enthusiastic cooperation of all the Patrons of the state. A second hall has been hired, adjoining Tremont Temple, in which will be held as a feature of the state grange an "agricultural exhibit of Massachusetts quality." It is planned to show a specimen of everything that grows on Massachusetts soil, displayed in an attractive way, and every specimen must have been grown or produced by a member of the grange in Massachusetts. There will be no competitive show, no premiums, no ribbons and no scoring. It will be simply an exhibition of these products, with nothing except absolutely first quality admitted. The different sections will all be represented by their products, particularly as Massachusetts is fast becoming a state of specialized agricultural cultivation. This exhibit will be opened at 3 p. m. on Monday and will continue until 11 o'clock on Wednesday night. It will be free to every one and will doubtless draw thousands of people. With such an exhibit held in the center of the great metropolitan district of Boston, within a stone's throw of the capitol and in the very heart of the shopping district, the two results which constitute the motive for this undertaking are very certain to be accomplished—(1) to reveal the extent and excellence of the agricultural products of Massachusetts; (2) to demonstrate the part the grange everywhere is taking to promote agricultural efficiency and strength. — National Grange Monthly.

Want Their Bills.

Greenwich, Conn., has fifty-seven millionaires within its borders. It also has mosquitoes in plenty. Likewise it had 100 cases of malaria last year. Inasmuch as mosquitoes are malaria distributors par excellence, the village physicians asked the town authorities for an extermination fund of $5,000, which they didn't get. Then the fifty-seven varieties of millionaires were appealed to and they said, "Sure, the mosquito must go," and they subscribed $280. But they refuse to pay until the mosquitoes send in their bills.

COLLEGE CREWS
WORKING HARD

Oarsmen Getting Into Trim For Coming Rowing Regattas.

HEAVY BOAT AT CORNELL.

Varsity Eight Men Will Average 175 Pounds—Columbia Not Any Too Strong—Penn Weak—Yale Has Veterans Left—Other Crews.

Nothing but weary days of toil at the sweeps remains before the college oarsmen who have already begun the long grind of training that will know no end until the finish line has been crossed at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., or New London, Conn., as the case may be. The last few weeks have seen nearly every crew on the water, and from the present indications there seems reason to believe that the crews in the big regattas of 1913 will be the best that have ever been turned out by American colleges or universities.

The mild winter and the early spring have made it possible for the crews to get an earlier start than has been the case in years, and if they are favored with good weather all through the spring there will be no excuse on that account for not doing as well as expected. This will apply particularly to Columbia and Yale, which have to row on unprotected sheets of water. In the colleges there seems to have been a marked revival in enthusiasm, for this year, with one or two exceptions, more men have turned out for rowing than in years, and the coaches are particularly well pleased.

Jim Rice, at Columbia, is one of the unfortunate ones, for it seems no matter how he tries and how well his crews of the preceding year have done he is always face to face with the old bugaboo of too few men to fill the boats. Rice has a squad of some thirty varsity and thirty-five freshmen, and he will be lucky if he gets more than five-eighths on the water altogether.

Columbia, next to Wisconsin, was the last of the Poughkeepsie crews to begin outdoor work. Cornell has been on Cayuga for some time, and Pennsylvania has had several weeks' training on the Schuylkill. Syracuse, too, has been out for several weeks.

Both Harvard and Yale, the factors in the regatta at New London the day before the Poughkeepsie race, are well on the way. Harvard has had considerable training on the waters of the Charles, while the Yale squads have been on the New Haven harbor preparing for future events.

The preliminary plans of the Harvard crew are as ambitious as the Crimson has ever attempted, and if the Cambridge men should happen to come through victorious they will certainly be hailed the university champions of America. In addition to the annual race with Cornell, the Crimson will figure in a four cornered race between Pennsylvania, Princeton, Columbia and Harvard. Yale, on the other hand, has no early season races, and it seems that the policy of the New Haven rowing instructors is to keep away from anything that savors of actual competition before the big day at New London.

The other early season races that have been booked for this year are few and far between. Syracuse has refused to row the Navy for the first time in ten years, and the Orange will have no prerogative races on its schedule this year. Cornell will have only the Harvard race at Cayuga, while Columbia, in addition to being included in the Harvard regatta on May 17, may get a place in the proposed race between Princeton and the Navy on Lake Carnegie the week before the race on the Charles.

Pennsylvania will have the Harvard regatta and will also figure in a mile sprint with the Navy crews, and that about ends the college racing program in the east. Wisconsin may get a race on with the St. Paul boat club, but as yet it is rather doubtful, so that the Badgers will probably have to take the long trip east again without having had a chance to try themselves out on their home waters.

So far as veteran material goes, Columbia seems to be a little better off than any of its rivals at Poughkeepsie, and at New London Yale has an edge on Harvard, with only one man out of the 1912 varsity crew. Cornell and Wisconsin, however, have some excellent material to draw on from the 1915 freshman crew, while Columbia will be lucky if it gets more than one or two men from the freshmen eight that finished last. Harvard's freshman crew of last year was one of the strongest that the Crimson has ever had, and there will be little wonder if Wray fills his varsity boat up largely with men from the 1915 first year combination.

Penn has lost several of last year's men, but the 1913 freshman crew was a scrappy one. This may help some. Syracuse has all but two of last year's boat left.

Cornell's varsity crew is a mighty combination and averages nearly 175 pounds. Courtney's freshmen are better looking than usual, and the opinion seems to be prevalent at Ithaca that Cornell will have another cracking good freshman crew.
