La Frances Plead Not Guilty.

A plea of not guilty to the indictment charging them with swindling insurance and fraternal organizations out of $15,000 was entered in Circuit Judge Cleaton's court at Portland Wednesday by J. C. La France and his wife Amelia La France and his wife are alleged to have "planted" a dead body on the banks of the Clackamas River, after which Mrs. La France collected the insurance while her husband remained in hiding. La France has accused several Portland residents of being in league with him in the scheme but persistent investigations made by Special Agent Beatty for the District Attorney's office in the past four months have cleared the alleged accomplices of suspicion.

Graft.

Those who think the Port Commission would graft must have a poor idea of the ability to elect honest men from among their own number. If you elect honest men and they turn out to be dishonest, you can recall them, anyway the whole matter is under the supervision of the law, which provides that no port commissioner shall receive any compensation either directly or indirectly and all monies going into the hands of the treasurer, who is under heavy bonds and who can only be disbursed pursuant to action of the Board, on warrants signed by the President and Secretary drawn on the treasury.

The foolish arguments against the port are enough to make a person sick, but still they have a tendency to bewilder the voters.

A petition to intervene was filed in the federal court today by the Vulcan Iron Works in the libel suit of the Union Oil company against the schooner Anvil. The oil company furnished the vessel with fuel oil at Astoria on a number of occasions, for which it claims it was not paid, and an action to recover $1,255.17 was accordingly started. Now the iron works also asks to become one of the plaintiffs, so that it can collect some bills for repair work that was done. Eugene Guard.

THE SWINEHERD

How to feed and finish hogs for market is a science a knowledge of which is of great value to hog raisers.

Remember the limited capacity of the hog's digestive apparatus and form his concentrated ration accordingly.

Neither rape nor clover alone will do for growing, fattening hogs. They must have some grain twice a day for best results.

Don't give the sow too much bedding.

Unless wisely fed and cared for a herd of fine hogs will degenerate rapidly.

The day is not far distant when the scrub hog will be only a memory.

Sometimes a week's chilly rains or cold weather will set the pigs back a month in their growth.

CARING FOR SHEEP.

Importance of Keeping Ewes Thrifty. Docking the Lambs.

Nothing is more discouraging to the shepherd than a flock of ewes that get unhealthy and produce a weak, unhealthy set of lambs, writes an Ohio farmer in the American Agriculturist. Therefore it is of great importance to have the brood ewes in fine, healthy condition. This will insure a good supply of milk and careful mothers. In the care of our brood ewes we keep a constant supply of common salt in boxes where they can have access to it at all times. We also put some turpentine on the salt after the flies begin to make their appearance and more especially after the lambs begin to like salt.

The majority of our ewes are turned out on pasture before their lambs are dropped, the salt boxes put in the fields and kept well supplied. Now the lambs begin to arrive, and quite often twins are dropped. We try to visit the flock once or twice each day and look especially to see if the ewes own their lambs and examine each ewe to see that she has plenty of milk for the lamb and that her teats are all right. These little cares often save valuable lambs as well as trouble later on for the shepherd.

Ewes that do not drop lambs until the grass is well started should not be kept on rich pasture for the first week or two after the lamb is born. The supply of milk is liable to be abundant and often causes diarrhea in young lambs. If any of the ewes are poor milkers or produce weak lambs they should be put on fresh pasture and fed a liberal amount of bran and oats. The lambs when two or three days old should be docked, and unless retained for breeders the ram lambs should all be castrated. There is less danger of loss at this age and the lamb soon recovers from the operation if performed by a skillful hand—than when the lambs are older. There is less danger of loss from worms and the fly pests.

Oxford sheep are the largest and heaviest of the Down breeds. When in good flesh the ram should weigh 20 to 25 pounds and the ewe fifty pounds less. The wool is rather coarse, but the fleece is heavy, weighing from ten to twelve pounds. Oxford are best adapted to low land furnishing good pasture and do not do so well under range conditions or on rugged pastures. The ewes are very prolific, triplets being not uncommon. The lambs are rapid growers. The illustration shows a wether from the flock of the Wisconsin Agricultural college. He was a champion at the international live stock show.

In the eastern section of Ohio, known to produce the very finest of wool, the majority of sheep are washed before shearing. The brood ewes are driven to the stream or river and closely penned near the water's edge. They are led into the water one at a time and wool wet and gently pressed with the hands to cleanse it of grease and dirt. Care is taken to avoid the sheep getting its head under water or becoming strangled. After a week or ten days they are sheared. Care is taken to avoid cutting the teats or handling the ewe in such a way as to injure her. After they are sheared the hoofs are trimmed. They are marked or stamped so as to identify them, and they are ready to go to pasture to raise a flock of lambs and go into their winter quarters again to repeat their past year's mission.

Water For Calves.

Calves two or three months of age should have ten pounds of water a day. That was the result of a trial with thirteen calves at the Kansas station. In many instances the young calves get no drink except what they receive in their skim milk. Evidently this is not good care.

Diaz and Japan.

The fact that General Felix Diaz is not to be received at Tokyo as a representative of the Mexican government gives a new turn to speculation, and takes away from the visit some of its apparent significance.

From the guarded statements which Diaz gave out both in this country and Canada it was evident that he considered himself as going in an official capacity from the Huera government to the government of Japan. Apparently it had not occurred to him that Japan would receive him otherwise than in his official capacity. But as he proposes to go anyhow, it will be exceedingly interesting to note how he is received and to learn whether the surface indications really show what is going on underneath this queer junketing trip.—Portland Telegram.

I have taken three bottles of Chamberlain's Tablets and am now a well woman and weigh 168 pounds.
