A party arriving from Gold Beach last week says that two fishermen who had been quarreling over fishing rights, were about to commence legal proceedings, when another fisherman suggested that as lawsuits are expensive it would be greatly to their interests, financially and otherwise, if they would hire a hall, charge an admission fee, and fight it out under Marquis of Fishberry rules, the winner to have the decision regarding fishing rights, and the door money to be divided 60 and 40 per cent. The fishermen agreed, and the fight was pulled off before an appreciative audience. The younger man was the winner, though the older man displayed more science.—Coos Bay News.

According to E. L. Robinson, who returned today from a visit at his homestead in the sand hills, the cranberry crop this season will be larger than that of 1912. The crop this year is figured at 60 per cent of the full bearing, and an estimate places the production at 1,600 bushels. Most of the cranberry marshes are in the North inlet district, although there are some patches in the sand hills. Mr. Robinson has half an acre of three year old vines and expects to harvest from 40 to 50 bushels, this season. The early berries, "Early Black," will probably be on the market next week, but the later varieties will not be harvested until the first or middle of September.—Marshfield Record.

LOOKING AHEAD.

To slip into the right hand seat, To grip the throttle and to feel The answer in the measured beat Of plunging rod and whirling wheel.

To watch the slipping, flashing steel; To coax her to the schedule, flat, As she roars with heave and reel— Now, where's the life compare with that?

Yet sometimes as with steady eye I scan the stretch of track ahead I think the rails on which we fly, Which here have just the proper spread, Out there are but a single thread That sure as fate will ditch the train And fill the right of way with dead— An instant's fancy of my brain!

Such thoughts as that all pass me by While we are on a grade or curve. It's where the level reaches its end That they come flicking at my nerve. But do I think to check or swerve? No, no! I've learned I can depend On those two rails. They always serve Straight on to the division's end.

It's like that on the road through life. Ahead it seems to narrow so That when we glance up from the strife Beyond there'll be no room to go. But from experience we know That there'll be room in plenty, quite, So keep on moving fast or slow. We'll make the terminus all right! —Chicago Daily News.

THOUGHTS ARE BLOSSOMS.

FRIENDS give flowers To mark the hours Of changing seasons as they roll; Thoughts we give, By them we live, And thoughts are blossoms of the soul. —M. A. E. Benton.

A RAINY DAY AND YOU.

THOUGH the rain may patter, patter, On the sounding roof, no matter: I never miss the skies so fair and blue, For my heart is singing, singing, Sunny golden fancies winging.

When I spend a rainy afternoon with you.

WHAT care I though clouds may lower And the tempest prove its power And ne'er a bird or bloom to grace the view?

Seems to me 'tis summer weather All the time we are together, So I've learned to love a rainy day—and you! —Birmingham Age-Herald.

THE OLD DREAMS.

THE old dreams, the gold dreams, the green dreams and true, The bright dreams, the light dreams, the dear dreams of you! The old dreams forever, And no dream to die Down all the dark purple Of night in the sky.

THE old dreams, the bold dreams, the loved dreams that come Of you in the sweet vales when old lips are dumb.

The old dreams forever, To guide and to cheer, The spring with its laughter, The fall with its tear.

THE old dreams, the stoled dreams that Until to our tired arms in dear rest they creep. The old dreams forever, What'er may befall, And love's dream of morning, The best dream of all. —Baltimore Sun.

When is a man intoxicated? We contend that when a man is fully under the influence of liquor that he can go home without any fear of his wife he is drunk.
